Japan, Fearless, Defiant Ploughing With Convicts How Rich Are We? Not Very Latest Dillinger News

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

ADMIRABLE are the courage and resourcefulness of Japan, defying desperately bad conditions at home, laying down new international law for the whole western world as regards dealings with China, reaching out, everywhere, for foreign trade. Establishing diplomatic missions in every little central and south-eastern country in Europe.

Japan is driving British trade from Turkey, offering the Turks long time credits and prices with which no European nation can compete.

You realize where this nation would be without protective tariffs when you talk with Mr. Chapin, of Detroit, recently Secretary of Commerce. Japan sends in tennis shoes of good quality, to be retailed here at ten cents a pair, and well-made bicycles to sell at three dollars and twenty-five cents.

Britain's Premier MacDonald is said to be "much vexed" by Japan's assumption of a dictatorship in Asia. There are only seventy million Japanese, as against Britain's three hundred million assorted Asiatics in India. But Japan's 70,000,000 will fight for Japan to the last man, whereas Britain's 300,000,000 would not fight for Britain at all.

It is to be hoped, for Japan's sake, that she will not overlook the fact that war has changed, explosives and poison gas kill the brave as easily as they kill the timid. The next war will be an air war, and Japan, a nation of inflammable, closely-crowded houses, is open to destructive attack by fire bombs. Also, Japan has never been through a real war. Beating disorganized China, or beating Russia under the czars, means nothing.

The country is shocked, mildly, to learn that, for the lack of mules, at Arkansas Tucker prison farm, convicts are hitched in the traces, and made to pull cotton planting machines.

Six convicts are hitched to each cotton planter, with a seventh man guiding the machine. The sharp steel teeth dig only two or three inches into the soft soil. Four men could do the work easily; two could do it, if they really worked.

Many an old woman in Europe and Asia would laugh at the "terrible hardship" inflicted on the poor convicts. Thousands of such women pull plows, one woman harnessed up with one donkey or one cow, doing her share, the traces arranged to make her task not quite half.

Rechs, in his "Man and the Earth," shows your primitive ancestor perched in the tree, bow and spear in hand, watching for the enemy, while his two old wives pull the wooden plough below him, his youngest wife guiding the plough. There could be no healthier exercise than ploughing, in reason. It compels very deep breathing, rids the lungs of residual air, and might help reconcile the young convict to honest work later.

How rich is the United States? How rich are its people? You cannot answer the former question. Based on national income, in good times, you might reply, "as of today." But the U. S. A. is worth about one trillion eight hundred billion. But that is misleading. Alaska alone, is worth more, so are several of the states, and the oil still unused is worth much more.

If you figure wealth by individual savings, we are very poor. The country's total savings amount to only fifty thousand million dollars, barely four hundred dollars per capita.

It is a comfort to know that Americans have 15 per cent of their accumulations invested in homes, as against 11 9-10 per cent ten years ago.

But that showing is pitiful. A healthy Negro slave, before the war, was worth one thousand dollars, and the average white is "worth" now less than five hundred dollars.

The average old American, dying penniless, dependent on others, finds satisfaction, perhaps, in thinking how much he has spared. And that may be the important thing. Since spending keeps business and industry going.

The French do not think so. Every old Frenchman thinks himself disgraced if he has failed to make himself at least modestly independent after a lifetime of work.

The latest concerning Bandit Dillinger credits him with robbing a bank, getting $29,000 and disappearing, as usual, with two friends. His father admits that during the wild hunt for his son, Dillinger came home to spend a quiet evening with rela-

Allen, Jorgens; Welland, Ferrell

By BILL GRIMES

Fenway Park, April 21—A home run by Babe Ruth with one man on base featured the first inning of the opener of the Red Sox-Yankees series here this afternoon before a crowd of more than 20,000 fans.

Johnny Allen for the Yankees and Bob Weiland were the starting hurlers. Weiland didn't enjoy his start much, for Combs hit the first ball pitched into left field for a double. Rolfe went out, while Combs took third, and Ruth smashed the ball over the left field fence, wait to score two runs.

The Hose scored a run in their half of the frame when Morgan doubled and scored on Roy Johnson's single.

The Yanks piled up two more runs in the second. Jorgens walked, Heffner beat out a bunt and Allen sacrificed the pair along. Combs doubled for the second time, to score Jorgens and Heffner. Rolfe fouled out, and Ruth was called out on strikes.

Two runs, scored by the courageous Hose in the third, cut the N. Y. advantage to one run. Walks for Chesell and Morgan, and a double by Roy Johnson accounted for the tallies.

Out into the lead raced the Red Sox in the fifth, when Werber doubled and scored on Reynolds' single. Reynolds made second on Ruth's fumble. The Solters singled to score Reynolds, and the Hose led, 5-4.

A single by Heffner, bunt by Deshong and sacrifice by Combs put men on second and third in the seventh. Rolfe flied to Roy Johnson, and Heffner scored the tying run after the catch.

Ruth, Gehrig, and Chapman walked to force Deshong across the plate.

The Yankees had a 6 to 5 lead in the seventh inning.

Rum Sales Banned During Election

Sale or delivery of liquor from package stores is barred next Tuesday, when delegates to the first pre-primary conventions and state and ward committees are elected, the State Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission warned today.

Sales in restaurants, hotels and clubs may be made during hours prescribed by local licensing authorities. Taverns are forbidden to make sales and must remain closed while the polls are open.

Old Scenes at New Fenway

A familiar photo, that of the Babe crossing the plate after one of his patented home run drives, but today's was his first in the new Tom Yawkey million-dollar ball orchard. The circuit blow sent the Yankees off to an early lead over the Red Sox and put the Bambino on even terms with Jimmy Foxx, his nearest rival, for home run honors. They both now have two. Over 20,000 cheered this mighty effort of the Babe, and well they might. (Picture by Boston Evening American Staff Photographer.)

LAWYERS TO WITNESS REUNION OF PAIR

By WIN BROOKS

Norma Millen and her husband, Murton, separated for the past six weeks, although both are confined within the walls of Dedham jail, will meet for the first time since their arrest at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

This was announced today by the Millens' attorney, George Stanley Harvey.

The announcement came following a visit of the parents of Abe Faber to the jail.

Faber is on trial with the Millen brothers, Murton and Irving, charged with the slaying of Patrolman Father MacLeod of Needham in connection with the holdup of the Needham Trust Co. on Feb. 2.

Faber's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Faber, were not permitted to see their son together. The mother spent fifteen minutes with her son and then the father visited him for the same length of time.

The meeting of Murton Millen and his bride was originally scheduled for this afternoon but at the last minute the plans were changed.

REQUESTS GRANTED

Recently the young bride had begged to see her husband who is separated from her by but a few yards of steel and concrete but heretofore her requests have been refused by the Norfolk County authorities. They, it was suddenly decided to permit them to see each other.

But they must also have State Detective Joe Ferrari present. Attempts to contact him and rearrange the time of the meeting were being made today.

Official permission has been

Youth Saws Way Out of Clinton Jail

Clinton, April 21—A manhunt by state troopers and police from half a dozen cities and towns was started today, following the escape from Clinton town jail of an armed gunman who was being held on the charge of armed robbery.

The escaped prisoner is Michael Canabala, 19, of Clinton. He pried a bar loose from the bottom of his cell, fled through the lockup to the courtroom above and made a clean get-away.

In the cell with Canabala was his pal, John Randicili, 26, who slept through the entire escape. Canabala endangered his own chance of escape by trying to arouse his companion from his slumbers, but it was of no avail.

The pair, in district court today, were held for the higher court on the charge of robbery while armed. They were arrested in Worcester several days ago, charged with holding up Charles Rotti, a paymaster, on April 17, near Wachusett reservoir.

As soon as the escape was discovered a general alarm was broadcast. Within an hour several score policemen and state troopers were scouring the countryside for the escaped prisoner.

LABOR TO REJECT ROOSEVELT'S RAILROAD PEACE PLAN

RESTORING OF HALF PAY CUT DEMANDED

Officials of 21 Unions Ready for Parley With Eastman

Washington, April 21 — Flat rejection by railroad labor of President Roosevelt's new plea for a continuation of the existing 10 per cent wage cut was indicated authoritatively today.

The workers will put forward, instead, a compromise demand for a restoration on July 1 of half the pay slash given them two years ago.

This became known as representatives of 21 standard railroad labor unions gathered for a renewal of conferences today with Joseph B. Eastman, federal coordinator of transportation.

Unless Eastman, directed by the President to resume his negotiations, can shake labor from this stand, a continuation of the weeks-long impasse appeared probable.

In this case, Mr. Roosevelt would carry out his intention of ordering "a thorough investigation by a fact-finding commission prior to July 1."

EMPLOYERS READY

The immediate reaction of railroad managements to the Chief Executive's latest effort was not available here. The employers, however, have expressed willingness for a continuation of the 10 per cent cut.

Mr. Roosevelt reiterated his previous suggestion for a six months' continuance, but added a sharp suggestion that the carriers immediately better conditions for those workers "at the bottom of the heap."

The minimum wages of rail employes, he said, should be brought at once into conformity with NRA standards. His proddad also for changes in present systems of furloughs, part-time work and demotions.

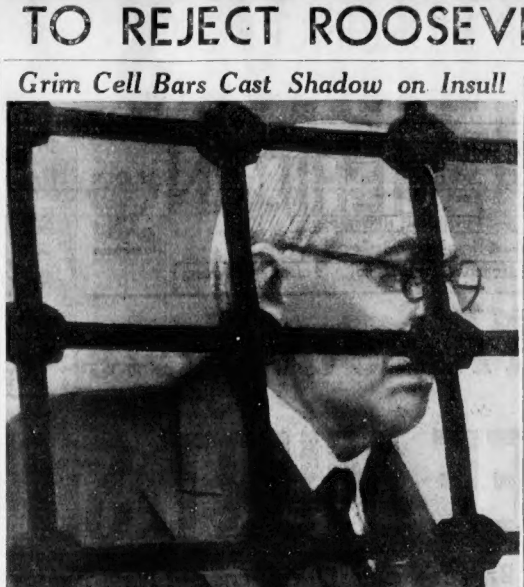
SOLUTION DEMANDED

He added he was convinced his suggestions were:

"What the welfare of the railroads, of their employes, and of the entire country demands as the immediate and temporary solution of this matter."

Apart from the immediate problem, the President had another cabinet committee at work today on a study of the whole railroad problem. He appointed it late yesterday, naming Secretaries Roper and Perkins and Attorney-General Cummings.

Grim Cell Bars Cast Shadow on Insull



Crestfallen over the order that ordered him returned to the United States for trial Samuel Insull, absconding utilities czar, is pictured here in the cell at Instabul that he occupied before being hurried on board the steamship Exilonia for transportation to Boston. Worn and wearied Insull appears far older than he is. (Picture by International News Photos.)

CABINET FOUR WARN AGAINST PRICE-FIXING

Roosevelt Gets Report Declaring Policy Is Not Feasible

(Copyright, 1934, by The Associated Press)

Washington, April 21 (AP) — President Roosevelt has been advised directly by a special cabinet committee that the creation of a policy on price-fixing is not yet feasible.

This conclusion was placed on the White House desk by Secretaries Perkins, Roper, and Wallace and Atty.-Gen. Cummings despite demands of price-fixing's friends and foes that a policy be enunciated.

The report, still withheld from publication, was authoritatively described as recommending that positive steps be taken to get information which would make an objective judgment possible.

EXPERIMENTAL STAGE

The report is short. It makes no attempt to decide the merits of questions as to whether prices have risen too far under NRA price control provisions in codes or whether such provisions have been conducive to monopoly.

The report carries importance because of its possible effect on the President's attitude toward prices.

If the advice is accepted, it was said, a continuation of the experimental attitude toward the questions may be expected, at least until completion of a more thorough inquiry.

This has been the essence of NRA'S attitude, based on the belief that far too short a time has passed to determine results definitely or to correct all evils that may have occurred along the line.

DARROW TO REPORT

The special cabinet committee's report reached the President just a step ahead of that from the National Recovery Review board. The latter is to determine the effect of codes on small business.

Clarence Darrow, head of the Review board, has arranged for a conference at the White House and may hand in his findings today.

A section of NRA, also has issued a general condemnation of present practices, but has indicated approval in general of certain price control methods by a special committee of NRA officials.

NRA is now engaged in preparing another report which will include the opinions of economists, widely known experts, as well as a great amount of new factual material.

WOMAN SEIZED FOR AIDING DILLINGER

Trail of Bandit and a Companion Leads to Canada Line

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., April 21 (Ins)—Leaving a bullet-riddled automobile behind him, John Dillinger, t shantion's No. 1 desperado, and his pal, John Hamilton, were believed to have escaped into Canada across thes traits of St. Mary.

Federal egents were holding Hamilton's sister, Mrs. Jean Steve, on charges of harboring the two fugitives, According to the Department of Justice men, Dillinger and Hamilton, both injured, spent Tuesday night at the Steve home and departed Wednesday morning, presumably to steal across the international border.

YOUTH RELEASED

With Mrs. Steve, the federal agents also arrested her son, Charles Campbell, but released him shortly before noon today. They continued to hold the woman.

According to police, Mrs. Steve told officers Dillinger was equipped with several rifles, two machine guns and two bullet-proof vests. The pair arrived driving two cars, and left one of the cars at the Soo, she was reported to have said.

MAY HIDE IN WOODS

Although Michigan state police post at Newberry, Mich., denied receiving any orders to join in the hunt it was reported state police cruisers were conducting a secret search along the strait which separates the eastern tip of Michigan's upper peninsula fro mthe mainland of Ontario.

Due to the wild character of the country surrounding the Soo district, state police admitted any efforts to find the pair if they are hiding on the American side would be difficult.

Foils Bag Snatcher

Miss Elizabeth Morison, of 44 Brimmer st., daughter of Prof. Samuel E. Morison of Harvard, successfully resisted a purse snatcher last night near her home. She won a tug of war with a man of about 40 when he finally took to his heels. She then telephoned police.

WHALEN BOOM LAUNCHED IN TAMMANY

Many Leaders Favor Grover to Help to Clean Up Hall

New York, April 21 — A drive was launched today by prominent members of Tammany Hall to bring about the election of Grover Whalen to succeed John F. Curry as leader of the organization, or, if that is impossible, to make Whalen a liasion officer between the hall and the Roosevelt administration in Washington.

Curry, the first man ever voted out of the leadership in the 135 years of Tammany existence, was in retirement today, declining to comment on the proceedings.

The silvery-haired chief, dubbed by his opponents "The Man of Blunders," was removed by the executive committee last night by a vote of 14 1-3 to 10 1-6. One member, controlling half a vote, was not present.

Advocates of the plan to elect Whalen as Curry's successor said today the former "official greeter" of the city would make an ideal chieftain in present circumstances, one who would regain for the Hall a larger measure of its lost prestige and one who might be expected to favor a cleaning up of the organization.

Curry's fall from power is attributed to three major errors on his part.

He opposed the nomination of Franklin D. Roosevelt at the Chicago convention.

He unsuccessfully opposed the nomination of Herbert H. Lehman for governor of New York.

And he refused the mayoralty nomination to Mayor Joseph V. McKee who had succeeded Walker by reason of the latter's resignation during the Seabury investigation.

(Copyright, 1934, by International News Service)

London, April 21 (INS)—News of the downfall of John F. Curry as ruler of Tammany Hall came as a shock to former Mayor James J. Walker, one of Curry's long-time close allies.

"There is nothing I can say at this distance," said Walker today.

"The chief's ousting is a shock and a surprise to me.

"I must refrain from commenting. I must have further information before I can get a clear view of what is transpiring."

INSULL HIDES DEFENSE PLAN

By International News Service

Aboard S. S. Exilona, at Sea, April 21 (INS)—How Samuel Insull plans to fight the charges he will face when he arrives back in Chicago was a secret the former financier was carefully guarding as his "prison ship" sailed the blue Mediterranean today toward the North African coast.

Insull faces the sharpest legal battle of his career when he reaches Chicago and goes to trial on indictments growing out of the collapse of his $2,000,000,000 utilities combine.

Yet the aged former magnate has given no indication of what his plans are to defend himself against charges that may send him to the penitentiary. As far as can be learned he has engaged no attorneys and has no legal counsel other than a firm of solicitors in London.

Peggy McMath and Parents Now in Detroit

Mr. and Mrs. Neil McMath with their daughter, Peggy, have left Harwichport on the Cape, where they have resided for several years, for Detroit, where they will make their permanent home.

All will recall the horror which swept Massachusetts when almost a year ago the news of the kidnaping of Peggy was flashed throughout the country.

Five days later all breathed a sigh of relief when Peggy was returned to her parents.

The story of the courage with which this ten-year-old child met the ordeal, her keen recollection of all that had happened during those days of captivity, showing great intelligence and almost unbelievable poise and control, amazed all.

For some days after the kidnaping of Peggy and before the actual perpetrator of the crime was apprehended, there were rumors that Neil McMath was in some way involved in the kidnaping, and unfortunately these rumors became matters of public comment.

The searching investigation into all the facts of this case which was carried on by the district attorney and the police showed beyond any question that such rumors had no basis in fact and were in all respects unwarranted.

Mr. McMath was in no way and at no time involved in this dastardly crime and the publication of these unworthy and prejudicial rumors was most regrettable.

TODD MYSTERY DATA STUDIED

By Associated Press.

Bridgeport, Ct., April 21—Investigators seeking to solve the Arthur Todd mystery held a long conference here today with Coroner John J. Phelan.

A toxicologist's report was submitted, but those attending the conference did not disclose whether the examination of body vital organ's showed any trace of drugs or alcohol.

Norwalk police at first announced the meeting as a formal inquest, but the coroner has set no date for his official inquiry.

The conference was first called by the coroner since the body of the 70-year-old man was found just a week ago today in Long Island Sound.

WILD COW GIVES TOWN SCARE

Falmouth, April 21—It has remained for a wild little Jersey cow to give this town its most shuddery thrill in nigh onto forty years.

Only last September, the heifer was a placid and contented pasture grazer on the farm of Robert Leatherbee. Then she went native. She leaped three wire fences, and reverted to the wild.

During the winter, she lived, somehow. All the farmers thought she was dead of starvation. A few days ago, she emerged from the backwoods. Since then, she has chased children, attacked horses, disputed the right of way with autos, and gone generally berserk.

Now a notice is posted.

"Ten dollars reward. Get her, dead or alive."

Yacht Sold for $11 Down

Talk about rising prics! Today William Nolan, ship broker, bought a 102-foot, 61-ton, twin-motored yacht for a mere $110—and he paid only $11 down.

Uncle Sam, represented by Deputy U. S. Marshal Daniel J. Chapman, was the salesman. The craft was the La Masette IV, once the property of William Farnum, erstwhile movie idol. She was seized several months ago for customs duty.

Nolan's bid was the highest of three submitted at Commercial wharf. So for $110, he got a yacht appraised at $6000 and worth perhaps twice that!

GIRL WINS FIGHT FOR PURSE

Vernon and Brimmer sts.

Her assailant, a man about 40 years old, in a gray topcoat and gray soft hat, made a lunge at Miss Morison's handbag as he was passing and sought to wrest it from her grasp.

Without an outcry the young woman resisted his attempts. A tug-of-war ensued until the thief finally perceiving that he was making no headway, took to his heels.

'Pussyfoot' Pay for '35 in Air

By Associated Press

Columbus, O., April 21 — W. E. "Pussyfoot" Johnson, internationally known as a crusader against liquor, made $900 last year as a lecturer for the Anti-Saloon League, records on file today showed.

His estimated remuneration for next year?

"God knows," was his answer.

He is, he explained from his home at McDonough, N. Y., employed "only occasionally."

The records were included in a compromise plan of the American Issue publishing Co., which proposed to pay off in bank claims the personal debts of Johnson and Ernest H. Cherrington, secretary of the World League Against Alcoholism and education director of the Anti-Saloon League.

SHOTS HALT 2 IN CHASE

Seven revolver shots and a chase of more than a mile were necessary, today, before police could capture a pair of men found loitering in the Andrew sq. section, their coats bulging with automobile horns.

Sergt. John J. Tesorero and Patrolman Timothy Wallace were in a prowl car when they encountered the pair. Instead of halting, when ordered to do so, the men took flight. Leaping from the machine, the officers gave chase, firing the shots as they ran.

During the chase, according to the police, the men dropped the plunder.

The men gave their names as Henry J. Cassell, 24, of Gold st., South Boston and John H. Black, 28, of Dorchester st., Boston.

Congressional Inactivity Helping Spread of Communism

GREAT surprise is felt throughout the country that Congress takes no notice of the spread and increasing boldness of Communist propaganda in our midst.

The exposure of these sinister activities, made by the Hearst papers recently, should have resolved any doubts the most skeptical entertained as to the reality of this menace. For nearly two weeks these articles appeared daily. They were packed with facts, names, dates, literal quotations from circulars and letters—all of which had been carefully verified before publication.

The articles produced a profound impression throughout the country, reflected in letters from readers, editorial comments and otherwise.

We called upon Congress to launch a systematic investigation, and to do it without delay. We reminded Congress that publicity is the great safeguard of the people against a furtive and secret danger of this type, and stated—what everybody knows and concedes—that an investigation, backed by adequate power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence, is the first step in curbing activities so destructive and vicious.

THERE are numerous journals circulating freely, without regulation or supervision, which are openly seditious in character and purpose. Most of them are subsidized from mysterious and alien centers of enmity to the United States.

But perhaps more dangerous and subtle is the Communistic propaganda which is being carried on in our schools.

As we said in an editorial appearing in these columns recently:

"Large sections of the youth of America, instead of being instructed truthfully in the history and aims of their country, are taught to hate their country, to foment disorder, to pray for the overthrow of the government and to apply in their lives and contacts, as they grow to maturity and take their place as citizens, the technique of revolution imported into this country from lands where Communism has accomplished its purpose of overthrowing all existing authority."

Added point was given to this warning last Saturday in a speech made in Detroit by former Justice George N. Clark, of the Michigan Supreme Court. HE DECLARED THAT NINETY PER CENT OF THE PROFESSORS IN THE UNITED STATES ARE TEACHING COMMUNISM TO THEIR PUPILS.

THIS is appalling! It cannot be ignored!

The training of American youth cannot be entrusted to professional crack-pots of this type. They are veritable disease germs. They must be rooted out.

Is it possible that Congress is insensible to a danger, so abundantly shown, and to its duty in the premises?

When a duty of so high and imperative a character clamors for performance, are we to be regaled with asinine performances like the Bulwinkle investigation of Professor Wirt—a transparent piece of cheap politics designed to discredit an American citizen who had merely put his finger on one of the ADMINISTRATION'S WEAK SPOTS and stated, SIMPLY AND MODESTLY, a fact which high administration officials have been for months proclaiming INSOLENTLY AND DEFIANTLY?

Let Congress realize that in this investigation it made a monkey of itself—not of Dr. Wirt, as it intended.

Let it be content to exercise its constitutional powers by SERVING THE PEOPLE and NOT BY OPPRESSING THEM.

And one of its prime duties—immediate and pressing—is to investigate to the core this vicious Communist propaganda, which greets one at every turn and in every variety of artful guise!

O. O. McIntyre NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

NEW YORK, April 21—I popped in on a gentleman who had not arisen the other morning. He was luxuriating in most magnificent splendor. Although he's not especially extravagant. His enormous bed with a dove gray canopy built from the floor was the quintessence of silk, satin and fineries.

O. O. McIntyre

The lighting was indirect, a handy book shelf within easy reach of his pillow, also a telephone, humidor and swinging patented lighter. Inset in the foot of the bed a clock with phosphorescent hands. Too, a swing-around stand like dentists use with a thermos jug of water, pads, pencils and house push buttons.

He wore a monogrammed slumber suit of golden brown with robe and slippers the green of St. Elmo's fire racked near by. Departing, I thought how one third of life is spent in bed yet most of us regard sleep as a haphazard interlude and make no effort to achieve comfort attaining it.

Don Herold does all his work in bed, breakfasting there and not dressing until he has turned out his daily quota of writing and drawing. Long ago he became washed up with exercise. Mark Twain was another humorist whose entire literary output came from his pillows.

I am of the wandering and wondering instead of the prying sort. That is why I like to laze on a bench in Battery Park facing the twinkling harbor, watching the pert tugs, ferries, Coney sidewheelers, tramps and giant leviathans churning a grand crescendo. Measured by seathetics not a beautiful spot in itself but the air is tangy and affectionate and the clouds fluffily tinted and egg-beaten white. An admirable setting to weave rainbows of wistful fancy.

York, England, has been the generating ground for innumerable fine British actors. An entire imported company playing on Broadway in "The Shining Hour" came from there originally. The area has flowered the best in diction. But they have much to practice on. One of the streets of the town is Whippmawhopmagate.

I swung, or rather sauntered, into East 52d street yesterday afternoon in time to see an asthmatic Gay '90 pug dog beribboned in pink trotting along on a leash. Somehow I expected it to be in tow of a C. D. Gibson girl in shirt waist, white piqué shirt and sailor hat. Instead it was piloted by a young modern in slacks, sandals, polo shirt, perky saucer-sized hat who burnt her cigarette in ankle deep whiffs. My pooch barked at both furiously. And John D. Rockefeller, Jr., turned to gaze.

Gene Tunney is leading the sheltered life in his Connecticut domain and the only time I see him is when I come to town. Never a gadabout, in his hey-dey he was nevertheless seen at an occasional tea or a first night of the Lunts, but nothing now lures him from cloister. He likes to walk through his acres with his police dog, chop wood and spend much time among his books, which, personally selected are said by the bibliophiles to express surprising literary tastes.

Many say his long talks with George Bernard Shaw on Brione, the island of his honeymooning, had much to do with his typical life of the English countryside.

Reporters such as Lindsay Denison do not come with every generation. There is always a skip or so. He ran with the pack that included O'Malley, Cobb, Ed Hill, Karl Kitchen, Swope and Martin Green. Lamentable but true, there are no New York reporters like them these days.

Denison was a reportorial gyroscope, the swifter he spun the steadier he was. A Yale man and dude of the campus, his newspaper career was noted for his sloppy dressing. The only thing that interested him was scent of the story and the baying that followed behind, for "Denny" was usually out front. He is among the few men the waspish city editor, Charles Chapin, never rebuked. For Denison was sensitive and Chapin needed him.

There are people I've never seen I'd like to see just to see how nearly my mental pictures correspond. On hand, I think of William McFee, Edwin Arlington Robinson, Augustus Thomas, Gatti-Cazzazi, Dashiel Hammett and Faith Baldwin. With no exception my mind snap-shots have been extraordinarily accurate.

A notable failure was size-up of Chevalier. I saw him mentally as dapper, foppish, with a twist of capsule mustache. This when he was an idol of the Paris boulevards, unknown to America. It was a surprise to find a pigeon-toed, farmerish looking fellow who might have been yanked from the south end of a north bound plow.

WOMAN FINED FOR HURLING BOTTLE

NOT GUILTY IN DRUNKENNESS CHARGES

Round One of the "Bottle of the Century" ended in municipal court today when Judge Charles L. Carr found that Mrs. Helen G. O'Brien, 24, of Elliston st., Newton Center, tossed a bottle that struck a spectator who, until that time, was getting a big kick out of a man-sized wrestling riot.

Mrs. O'Brien was fined $50 and appealed.

There was altogether too much excitement at Mechanics Hall the night of March 20, the judge found, in ruling that Mrs. O'Brien was not drunk.

It was the excitement rather, that affected her, he said.

As Mrs. O'Brien appealed the fine for assault and battery, there will be a Round Two in superior court.

The case, which took up some time yesterday, when several witnesses identified Mrs. O'Brien as having thrown the bottle that struck John Girvoir, 25, of 37 Taft st., Medford, was resumed.

The only witness today was Lieut. Andrew J. Hurley, of the Back Bay police station. He testified Mrs. O'Brien was drunk, but under cross-examination admitted he determined her condition only by an odor of liquor on her breath and the fact that she leaned on the desk and kept calling for Asst. Dist. Atty. Frederick T. Doyle.

In his decision, the judge cited that there were various degrees of sobriety. Under the suit laws, for instance, a person may be guilty of operating under the influence and not be drunk, he said.

"I am inclined to go so far as to say the defendant was not drunk," the judge said. "No doubt she was slightly hysterical and excited and having a good time.

Marconi Plans Study of Electric Woman

Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press

Rome, April 21—Guglielmo Marconi, famous scientist and inventor of modern wireless telegraphy, said today that there is no doubt as to the authenticity of the phenomenon of the electric woman, Signora Anna Monaro.

From Signora Monaro's breast, several times every night, while she is asleep, there emanates enough light to illuminate a room.

"Signora Monaro was brought to Rome at my initiative, at head of the National Council of Research," said Marconi, "following the undisputable testimony of a number of doctors and creditable persons who saw the light come from Signora Monaro's breast sufficiently strong to light up a room.

"This testimony coming from such sources cannot be questioned. I had her brought to Rome because there is apparatus here capable of registering and measuring and perhaps determining the nature of the phenomenon.

"At this moment, I have no further information concerning the case than that gathered at Trieste. (Where the phenomenon was first seen as the woman lay asleep in a hospital.)

"Since arriving at Rome Signora Monaro has not exhibited these rays."

The inventor said he had not yet been to see the woman, and did not expect to see her until the phenomenon commenced again, but that he was being kept fully informed by Prof. Magrini, secretary of the National Council of Research.

In the meantime specialists at the clinic where Signora Monaro is kept have been organized under Prof. De Sanctis to study the history of the case in order to be prepared when the illuminations begin again.

'STONE GIRL' IS BACK AT PLAY

BY ASSOCIATED PRESS

Atlanta, April 21—Six months ago little Ruth Dye was unhappy. She couldn't play with the other children because her back was too stiff and she grew tired so quickly.

The doctors said Ruth was afflicted with scleroderma. She didn't know what that big word meant, and folks wouldn't tell her that her body slowly was turning to stone.

Scleroderma is caused by a glandular infection which deposits calcium in the muscles, hardening them. The 9-year-old girl's neck and back muscles were hard, and the condition gradually was moving down toward the limbs.

Dermatologists at Grady Hospital, a municipal institution, began systematic treatments. They injected a thyroid extract into the child's body twice weekly and gave her regular massages with a specially made salve.

Within two months her condition improved. She could open and shut her hands and instead of being irritable she became mentally composed for the first time in her life.

Today Ruth is as normal as any 9-year-old girl. She has gone back to school and is making progress in her studies. On the playground she romps and plays with other children and is enjoying life again.

Billy Hendricks, 7 years old, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., is suffering from the same disease, and little hope is held for his recovery. Physicians here said Billy's condition probably had reached a more advanced stage than that of the two girls when they began treatments.

ESCORT HELD IN GIRL ATTACK

Worcester, April 21—The story of a two-hour battle with her escort, during which she chewed one of his ears and then fled into the woods where she became lost for several hours was told police here today by Miss Florence Lonzeau, 25, of Waverly st., this city.

As a result, police several hours later arrested James Leonard Splane, 31, of Ingleside ave., a ship's radio operator, on a charge of attempted attack.

The girl said she went riding with Splane last night, but in a lonely section of Westboro, he attempted to molest her. She said she struggled for two hours, biting one of his ears before she made her escape. It was dawn before she found her way out of the woods and got home.

Lawrence Raid Bares Gambling Ring Here

A powerful gambling syndicate, with headquarters in Boston, and preying on its victims, principally women, in a score of cities in Massachusetts and adjoining states, was revealed today as 12 women and 29 men were arraigned on gaming charges in Lawrence district court.

Society dens and shop girls were revealed among those paying tribute to this syndicate through horse-race gambling.

Thousands of dollars daily is the toll paid to the gambling ring.

Those arraigned at Lawrence, each of whom was fined $50 by Judge Frederic N. Chandler, were taken in a wild raid made by state troopers on a second floor racing establishment within a block of the Lawrence police station. Fines totaled $22.50.

The scene about the Lawrence court house as the 41 gambling victims went on trial resembled the old time scenes connected with the Lawrence textile strike.

Scores of persons, most of them women, milled in and about the court house, taking police by surprise and requiring swift assignment of additional officers to preserve order.

While only 12 women were among the defendants in court, the testimony of the State Police showed that among the scores who escaped when the troopers swooped down on the pool room, Friday afternoon, many, if not a majority, were women.

Judge Chandler gave the women the right of way as the 41 defendants faced him today. He ordered the women before him first and they came in two batches of six each.

There was a girl of 22, attired in an ensemble of light gray and powder blue. She might have served as a model in a smart shop.

Contrasting her appearance was a woman past 65, attired in somber black. The ages of the others ranged somewhere in between, but all, save one, treated the court experiences with nonchalance if not disdain.

As a result of the testimony of Sergt. John P. Sullivan, who headed the raiding party, the judge fixed a uniform fine of $50.

The sergeant testified the ten troopers and himself found complete paraphernalia for race track gambling, including the private telephone line to headquarters in Boston.

He offered as evidence a bag containing over $300 — money he found in a betting envelope and in the cashier's cage.

MRS. JELKE TO WED AGAIN

Special Dispatch to Boston Evening American

Reno, Nev., April 21—Mrs. Eugenia Woodward Jelke of Newport, R. I., divorce fiasco fame, faced her contemplated divorce suit here today with much equanimity, having received approximately a $1,000,000 settlement from the oleomargarine magnate, it was reported.

And after that, it is said she plans to wed Walter Richard, backgammon expert of New York.

Jelke, who is many years older than his vibrant wife, has been abroad most of the time, visiting his son and daughter-in-law, the young Barthimoew Jelkes, and there has been much speculation as to whether he would open his Newport villa, "Eagle Nest," this year.

He and Eugenia, "Neenie" Woodward, niece of Senator Underwood of Alabama, were married in the South after a romance courtship. But the marriage endured for only nine months, most of which, if the testimony was accurate, were spent in bitter warfare.

The Thin Man by DASHIELL HAMMETT

Soon to appear on the screen as a thrilling motion picture made by Cosmopolitan Productions for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

DASHIELL HAMMETT

There were spuots of color in Nora's cheeks and her eyes were dark. "The idiot!"

"Now, now," I said. "Maybe I should have warned you—he was heading in that direction last night. I think it's likely my old pal Mimi gave him a prod or two. What else did he turn the searchlight on?"

"He wanted to know about—what he asked was: "Do you figure Charles and the Wolf dame was still playing around together? Or was that all washed up?"

"That's the Mimi touch, all right," I said. "What'd you tell him?"

"I told him I didn't know whether you were 'still' playing around together because I didn't know that you had ever played around together, and reminded him that you hadn't been living in New York for a long time, anyway."

Nora asked me: "Did you?"

I said: "Don't try to make a liar out of me Mac. What'd he say to that?"

"Nothing. He asked me if I thought Jorgensen knew about you and Mimi and, when I asked him what about you and Mimi, he accused me of acting the innocent—they were his words—so we didn't get very far. He was interested in the times I had seen you, also, where and when to the exact inch and second."

"That's nice," I said. "I've got lousy alibis."

A waiter came in with our breakfast. We talked about this and that until he had set the table and gone away.

Then Macaulay said: "You've nothing to be afraid of. I'm going to turn Wynant over to the police." His voice was unsteady and a little choked.

"Are you sure he did it?" I asked. "I'm not."

He said simply: "I know." He cleared his throat. "Even if there was a chance in a thousand of my being wrong—and there isn't—he's a madman, Charles. He shouldn't be loose."

"That's probably right enough," I began, "and if you know—"

"I know," he repeated. "I saw him the afternoon he killed her; it couldn't've been half an hour after he'd killed her, though I didn't know that, didn't even know she'd been killed. I—well—I know it now."

"You met him in Hermann's office."

"What?"

"You were supposed to have been in the office of a man named Hermann, on Fifty-seventh Street, from around three o'clock till around four that afternoon. At least, that's what the police believe."

"That's right," he said. "I mean that's the story they got. What really happened: after I failed to find Wynant at any of the spots at the Plaza and phoned my office and Julia with no better results, I gave him up and started walking down to Hermann's. He's a mining engineer, a client of mine; I had just finished drawing up some articles of incorporation for him, and there were some minor changes to be made in them. When I got to Fifty-seventh Street I suddenly got a feeling that I was being followed—you know the feeling. I couldn't think of any reason for anybody shadowing me, but still, I'm a lawyer and there might be. Anyhow, I wanted to find out, so I turned east on Fifty-seventh and walked over to Madison and still wasn't sure. There was a small sallow man I thought I'd seen around the Plaza, but—The quickest way to find out seemed to be by taking a taxi, so I did that and told the driver to drive east. There was too much traffic there for me to see whether this small man or anybody else took a taxi after me, so I had my driver turn south at Third, east again on Fifty-sixth, and south again on Second Avenue, and by that time I was pretty sure a yellow taxi was following me. I couldn't see whether my small man was in it, of course; it wasn't close enough for that. And at the next corner, when a red light stopped us, I saw Wynant. He was in a taxicab going west on Fifty-fifth Street. Naturally, that didn't surprise me very much; we were only two blocks from Julia's and I took it for granted she hadn't wanted me to know he was there when I phoned and that he was now on his way over to meet me at the Plaza. He was another very puzzled man. So I told my driver to turn west, but at Lexington Avenue—we were half a block behind him—Wynant's taxicab turned south. That was the way to the Plaza and wasn't even the way to my office, so I said to hell with him and turned my attention back to the taxi following me—and there it was, too. I kept a look-out behind all the way over to Hermann's and saw no sign at all of anybody following me."

"What time was it when you saw Wynant?" I asked.

"It must've been fifteen or twenty minutes past three. It was twenty minutes to four when I got to Hermann's and I imagine that was twenty or twenty-five minutes later. Well, Hermann's secretary—Louise Jacobs, the girl I was with when I saw you last night—told me he had been locked up in a conference all afternoon, but would probably be through in a few minutes, and he was, and I got through with him in ten or fifteen minutes and went back to my office."

"I take it you weren't close enough to Wynant to see whether he looked excited or was wearing his watch-chain, smelled of gunpowder—things like that."

"That's right. All I saw was his profile going past, but don't think I'm not sure it was Wynant."

"I won't. Go ahead," I said.

"He didn't phone again. I'd been back about an hour when the police phoned—Julia was dead. Now you must understand that I didn't think Wynant had killed her—not for a minute. You can understand that—you still don't think he did. So when I went over there and the police began to ask me questions about him and I could see they suspected him, I did what ninety-nine out of a hundred lawyers would've done for their clients—I said nothing about having seen him in that neighborhood at about the time that the murder must have been committed. I told them what I told you—about having the date with him and him not showing up—and let them understand that I had gone over to Hermann's straight from the Plaza."

"That's understandable enough." I agreed. "There was no sense in your saying anything until you had heard his side of the story."

"Exactly and, well, the catch is I never heard his side of the story. I'd expected him to show up, phone me, something, but he didn't—until Tuesday, when I got that letter from him from Philadelphia, and there was not a word in it about his failure to meet me Friday, nothing about—but you saw the letter. What'd you think of it?"

ROOSEVELT STRESSES FULL FREEDOM OF PRESS

Letter Commemorating 25th Anniversary of International News Says Government Will Never Interfere

By International News Service

New York, April 21—A declaration that the United States government has never and will never subsidize a newspaper or a news service was made today by President Roosevelt in a letter commemorating the 25th anniversary of the founding of International News Service.

In his communication, one of scores received from heads of governments, statesmen, publishers and other leading figures throughout the world, the Chief Executive stressed the "freedom of operation" enjoyed by newspapers in this country.

"I personally find high satisfaction in the knowledge," he wrote, "that it is possible in this land of ours for anyone to establish a newspaper or a news service and to enjoy the freedom of operation guaranteed by our fathers."

TWO BROADCASTS TODAY

The outstanding news events of the last 25 years will be reviewed today in two world-wide broadcasts commemorating the anniversary.

Arthur Brisbane, famous editor and columnist; William A. Curley, editor of the New York Evening Journal; Floyd Gibbons, noted "Headline Hunter," and Joseph V. Connolly, president of International News Service, will take part.

Both of the programs will be carried to all parts of the world by short waves. Mr. Connolly will speak at 4.45 P. M. E. S. T. over Columbia Broadcasting Company network, while Mr. Gibbons and Mr. Curley will be heard over the National Broadcasting Company System at 6.30 P. M. E. S. T.

President Roosevelt's letter addressed to Mr Connoly as head of International News Service reads as follows:

"For a quarter of a century the International News Service has rendered a great public service to the nation and I welcome this opportunity to extend warm and sincere congratulations upon the celebration of the 25th anniversary of its establishment.

"Your predecessors, you, and those associated with you in the management of this great enterprise can justly be proud of the foundation that has been laid for its future building and continued service.

"A press association, collecting and disseminating news, the International News Service enjoys a prominent place and exercises a tremendous influence in its field of operations. That it has functioned always without fear or favor, exercising the responsibilities for exact, factual and intelligent reporting, should be a matter of great pride to its leaders and the world-wide staff of workers.

FREEDOM STRESSED

"I do not believe that it would be amiss here for me to say that I personally find high satisfaction in the knowledge that it is possible in this land of ours for anyone to establish a newspaper or a news service and to enjoy the freedom of operation guaranteed by our fathers and which, I am glad to say, still prevails. I am glad, too, that our government never has seen fit to subsidize a newspaper or a news service and I dare to make the prediction that it never will."

Prominent personages in the dozen or more foreign nations where daily newspapers of large circulation and tremendous local and international prestige receive the dispatches of International News Service joined with President Roosevelt in sending letters and cablegrams signalizing the anniversary.

OTHER LETTERS RECEIVED

Among these were President Masaryk of Czechoslovakia; Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss of Austria; Vice-Chancellor Franz Von Papen and Foreign Minister Baron Konstantin Von Neurath of Germany; Foreign Minister Hirota of Japan; Foreign Minister Kanya of Hungary; President Ayala of Paraguay; Joseph Avenol, secretary-general of the League of Nations; Lord Riddell, publisher of the London News of the World; Viscount Rothermere, publisher of the London Daily Mail; Lord Beaverbrook, publisher of the London Daily Express, and Maj. John Jacob Astor, publisher of the London Times.

Virtually all cited the tremendous growth and expansion of International News Service during the first quarter century of its existence, and paid tribute to the tenets of impartiality, accuracy and speed which have characterized the service since its inception.

International News Service was organized in 1909 primarily as an organization to meet the needs of newspapers in the United States alone.

It was only when there came a world-wide demand for the same type of unfettered, unprejudiced press association dispatches as American clients were receiving from International News Service that it branched out into the foreign field.

To the 25 bureaus in the United States were added new headquarters and new corps of experienced journalists to handle the news problems imposed by the project of distributing International News Service dispatches to the principal countries of the globe.

Today more than 900 newspapers in the United States, South America, Great Britain, France, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Czechoslovakia, Switzerland, Japan, Hawaii and other foreign countries receive their news dispatches from International News Service.

Devoted to the sole object of assuring fast and accurate coverage of news events to these foreign clients as well as to hundreds of newspapers in this country, International News Service now maintains leased wires aggregating some 60,000 miles. More than 75,000 words of news copy are handled each day.

New York, April 21—Gov. George White of Ohio today telegraphed Joseph V. Connolly, president of International News Service:

"On the occasion of the 25th anniversary of International News Service, I congratulate you and members of your far flung and efficient staff. One of the outstanding contributions to American progress has been the excellence of our newspaper reporting.

"Your organization has demonstrated its capacity for covering and distributing news. You have my best wishes for continued success and service to our great nation."

New York, April 21—A world wide representation of newspapermen was gathered in New York today for the annual convention of the American Newspaper Publishers Association and the celebration of the 25th anniversary of International News Service.

A delegation representative of the various countries served by International News Service will be present as two broadcasts commemorating the anniversary are transmitted around the world by the two networks.

Among those in the delegation are T. C. Gooch, general manager of the Dallas Times-Herald; J. David Stern, publisher, and Harry T. Saylor, editor of the Philadelphia Record, Camden Courier-Post and New York Evening Post; W. F. Bullock, London Daily Mail; August Hatfield, August Scherl Newspapers, Berlin, of Germany; Yuzo Fuse, the Yomiuri Shimbun, Tokyo, and others.

WOMAN TRIES TO DIE BY GAS

Haverhill, April 21—Miss Lena Merrill, 43-year-old shoe worker of 21 Fernald ave., this city, was rushed to Gale Hospital today in serious condition as the result of illuminating gas poisoning.

A neighbor found her on the floor of her home with three burners of the kitchen gas range wide open. He called the police, who took her to the hospital after administering first aid.

Dr. Francis W. Anthony, medical examiner, was called in and pronounced it a case of attempted suicide.

FILM FOLK FLEE IN NEGLIGEE

By International News Service

Hollywood, April 21—Fire drove scores of scantily clad actors and actresses out of the Del Flores apartments early today, but did little damage.

The fire started in the apartment of Miss Dorothy Davis, actress. A cigarette dropped between the cushions of a davenport set the piece of furniture ablaze, police said.

Believing the building to be on fire, other tenants, clad in negligees, night shirts and pajamas, climbed down the fire escapes and stood shivering in the cold, while fire companies extinguished the blaze, which did damage estimated at $350.

MAYOR SPIKES HOSPITAL FIGHT

Mayor Mansfield today bottled up protest against proposed abandonment of the City Detention Hospital, in Southampton st., South End.

It had been proposed to care for smallpox and leprosy cases hereafter in the South Division of City Hospital, where other contagious diseases are treated.

In the face of vigorous opposition, the mayor announced there had been no question of abandoning the Detention hospital, but merely of retiring its present superintendent, William E. Jameson.

"There is no cause for alarm," the mayor said. "It is merely a matter of making municipal economies wherever possible by removing unnecessary employes."

He said Jameson, who receives an annual salary of $1,800, loss 15 per cent, as well as the use of living quarters, subsistence and the services of a cook and housekeeper, would be placed on the retired list. His place will be taken by a caretaker.

Whenever a patient is sent to the institution, care is to be provided by City Hospital staff.

MURT SEES NORMA SUNDAY

given for the long awaited meeting of Murton and his imprisoned bride but as far as privacy goes, and the opportunity for exchange of whatever little confidences may have been anticipated by bride and bridegroom, separated for seven weeks by granite walls and steel bars, it won't be much of a meeting.

They are being brought together in the presence of the detective, counsel and jail guards principally at the insistence of Murton Millen, who has begged daily for more than two weeks for permission for the meeting.

The 12 married jurors destined to keep bachelor quarters for several weeks spent last evening getting acquainted around a bridge table. There are the makings of a good bridge and ping pong tournament in the courthouse dormitory where the 12 are living.

Accompanied by court attendants, the jurors went for a long walk this morning. This afternoon they were transported to Boston, where they took in the Red Sox-Yankee baseball game.

At Washington, Faber's counsel, William R. Scharton, sought the counsel of Clarence Darrow, the old master, with regard to the drafting of hypothetical questions in the defense of Faber.

And behind the locked doors of the courthouse District Attorney Edmund R. Dewing completed the outline of the preliminary opening he will make to the jurors tomorrow morning before they are taken to the scene of the crime.

The greater part of Monday, it is expected, will be consumed by the jury's visit to the bank, to the Dorchester garage where guns were seized and to the spot in Norwood where the car allegedly used in the getaway was found partially destroyed by fire.

Farley Defends Air Mail Contract Annulments

By International News Service

Newark, N. J., April 21 (INS)—Selfish financial and political interests have thrown up a "smoke screen" of hostile propaganda regarding cancellation of commercial air mail contracts, Postmaster General James A. Farley declared today, at exercises dedicating the cornerstone of the new federal building here.

Farley denied contracts had been cancelled without hearing and declared:

"When one goes behind the fogs and smoke screen raised by selfish financial and political interests he finds these contracts were conceived and executed by collusion and fraud and that millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money were being distributed to insiders in violation of the plain mandate of the law that such contracts could only be let by competitive bidding.

"Some of the concerns whose contracts were cancelled were owned by or affiliated with powerful banking interests, holding and manufacturing companies.

"Unconscionable profits had been made and exorbitant salaries and bonuses had been derived from stock promotions based on these fraudulent contracts. The system in vogue was unsound and dishonest and it was my plain duty, under the law, to end it all and put the air mail system on a sound, honest and legal basis."

BOY FINDS VIAL; BURNED BY ACID

Frank Firto, 10, of 3 Monument pl., Charlestown, picked up a small bottle in the rear of his home today while playing, and spilled it over his hands and wrists. Some of it got on his lips. It proved to be carbolic acid.

Screaming with pain, he was hurried to the Haymarket Relief hospital where he was treated for first degree burns. He was later returned to his home.

AIR MAIL BIDS 'FINE-COMBED'

By International News Service

Washington, April 21—Officials today began what they termed a "fine-tooth comb" scrutiny of the air mail bids received yesterday to replace the contracts of commercial companies cancelled by Postmaster General Farley last February.

"All bids are being carefully analyzed by air mail officials of the Post Office Department, the aeronautics branch of the Commerce Department, the Post Office Department solicitor, and a special assistant attorney general," Farley said.

"Before any contract is awarded it will be determined whether the bids were responsive to the advertisements, the responsibility of the bidders and the adequacy of the equipment offered. It will be several days before the contracts are awarded."

There were 45 bids submitted for the 17 routes and all were at lower rates than were paid for the same routes and the same service under the annulled contracts.

"The competition appears keen and bona fide," Farley said. "A considerable savings to the government is assured by these bids."

Friend Divorce Reversal Sought

Atty. William H. McSweeny, acting for Lester D. Friend, Marblehead box manufacturer, today filed four motions in Salem court in an effort to reverse the recent findings of the court against Friend in his wife's separate maintenance suit.

The first of them argued that the findings should be set aside as being against the law; the second was an appeal; the third a plea for a new trial, and the last a motion for a stay of proceedings. In his findings Judge Edward H. O'Brien granted Mrs. Blanche Gauthier Friend $300 for counsel fees and $25 the week until a further court order.

New Zealand Girl Flier Seeks Record

Lympne, Eng., April 21 (INS)—Using a biplane formerly owned by the Prince of Wales, Jean Batten, 24-year-old New Zealand girl, hopped off on a solo flight to Australia in an attempt to beat the record of 20 days established by Amy Johnson Mollison.

PHONE GIRLS GO TO DEMAND 35 HOUR WEEK

Determined to get a little more shelter from the Blue Eagle's widespread wings than they have in the last eight months, a score of New England telephone operators left Park sq. today for Washington, there to present their demands at the Telephone Code hearings.

"Of course, we went on a 40-hour week when the company signed the President's agreement last August," said Miss Mary A. McKeim, vice-president of the Boston local. "But at the same time we had to take a pay cut. That was not so good."

It used to be that a girl received a minimum of $24 a week after 10 years' service with the company, Miss McKeim explained. That, she added, was reduced to $22.

"We also used to have an automatic promotion system," she went on. "That went by the boards, too. So we are going to Washington on our vacations to see what we can do about it."

The operators, members of Local 1A of the Telephone Operators' Union, were joined here by girls from Bangor, Me., and other New England cities.

Before reaching the capital, they will be joined by still other groups from New York and New Jersey. Together they plan to demand the restoration of the $24 scale, the automatic promotion system and a 35-hour week.

The New England delegation is headed by Miss Grace Barry of Boston, who left for Washington with an advance guard last night to make preparations for the housing of the caravan.

Among those who boarded buses here today were Miss McKeim, Miss Margaret Gerry, secretary; Miss Mary O'Brien of the adjustment board, and Miss Mary Flanagan, president of the Bangor local.

Workers in the clerical departments of the company were unable to send representatives to the hearings as their vacations have not started. They will, therefore, be represented by the operators.

Company officials indicated they had no objections to the attendance of their employes at the hearings.

MAJOR AND GIRL HURT IN CRASH

Four persons including Maj. Patrick F. Healey, state movie censor, were injured in a head-on collision of two automobiles at Tremont and West sts., today.

Maj. Healey and Miss Merle Delancy, 22, of Huntington ave., Back Bay, are in City Hospital suffering from multiple contusions and possible internal injuries, but both will recover, according to physicians.

The others injured are Ernest Gaudet, 26, of Carter st., Leominster and Edmund Donnelle, 29, of Willard st., Leominster, both of whom were treated for minor injuries at the Haymarket Relief station.

When taken to the hospital Miss Delancy refused to admit her identity. She refused all information to the police. Later, her identity was revealed by Kenneth R. Douglass of Weld st., West Roxbury.

tives and neighbors. And Dillinger is lame. But for that, according to reporters, he might kidnap the attorney-general.

Fabulous stories surround him, as the old Robin Hood. Dillinger may come to believe what he reads about himself, and get caught.

Crime and bootlegging continue, as was to be expected. In prohibition days, bootlegging involved only contempt for law and Constitution. That was not so serious. But now it remains cutting down government revenue, and that is serious.

One thousand federal agents will be turned loose against the bootleggers, but one thousand will not be enough. There are tens of thousands of moonshiners, well hidden, approved or feared in their communities.

NRA may prove that supply and demand no longer count in business and industry, but they still rule in bootlegging and moonshining. As long as you can make "white mule" corn whiskey for fifteen cents a gallon and sell it for a dollar a bottle, there will be moonshiners, unless Americans suddenly acquire respect for law. One able Southern banker, his State still dry, remarked:

"For myself, I prefer prohibition with good corn liquor at two dollars a gallon against poor government whiskey at three dollars a bottle."

A distinguished Southern publisher, to whom excellent French brandy was offered, asked:

"Haven't you any corn liquor? That French stuff will burn your insides out."

BANK PAYOFF BILL IS GIVEN O. K. AGAIN

By Associated Press

Washington, April 21—For the second time, the House banking committee today reported favorably the McLeod bill to pay off depositors in closed banks, with an amendment to limit the payment to $2500 for each depositor and a provision for a loan of 85 per cent on the remainder of the claim.

The committee took this formal action because Speaker Rainey had ruled the report made more than a week ago was illegal, since the committee met without permission while the House was in session.

Friends of the McLeod bill, who are members of the committee, contended the previous action was prompted by "insincerity" and that the committee was attempting to block consideration of bank relief legislation.

First approval of the bill came as a petition to force House consideration obtained 145 signatures—the necessary number to take the legislation away from the committee and bring it to the floor.

FR. COUGHLIN ACTS

Friends of the measure assert the committee approved the bill to block this action and to enable further delay in the rules committee—which decides what measure shall be taken up in the House.

Father Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit Catholic priest, was waiting today before the House committee when the action was taken.

Father Coughlin issued a statement saying he was sorry to "find that this bill which is of such national import has had no open session hearing."

"Had I appeared before the banking and currency committee it was my plan to stress the moral angle of the entire affair," he continued.

"I regard the administration of today as partly responsible for the misdemeanors committed by the administration of yesterday in so far as one of the primary functions of government is to right wrongs.

"That a grievous wrong had been committed is not debatable. Under Mr. Hoover's administration there is incontrovertible evidence that the bank examiners were instructed by their federal superiors to turn in false reports as to solvency of the American banks.

"These reports moreover were printed in the daily press with the result that people who had faith in their democratic institutions were duped into depositing their money into cess pools of falsification.

"In this immoral activity the federal Government was a co-operator in crime.

"Unless this wrong is righted the very foundations of faith in democracy are being dynamited.

"It has been recently said that within a month or so it will be 110 degrees Fahrenheit in Washington. If this 73d Congress does not cure the cancer of our financial bondage it will discover that it is hotter than 'hades' in their own congressional districts."

Bay State Tax Share $1,500,000

An assessment of approximately $1,500,000 will be contributed by Massachusetts taxpayers toward making up $49,000,000 to be paid veterans for non-service connected disabilities under the Independent Offices Appropriation Bill, according to Karl Payne, director of Massachusetts branch of National Economy League.

Payne said this State furnishes about 3¼ per cent of money spent by the Federal government.

LINEUP GIVEN IN DISTRICT CONTESTS

By THE SPELLING BEE EDITOR

School Champions will do well to cut out whatever section of the ensuing plan, which applies to Districts of which their schools are a part. For this is the designation of Assembly Schools for all District Championship Spelling Bees to take place on next Friday, April 27, in the National and Metropolitan Spelling Bees of the Boston Evening American and the Boston Sunday Advertiser.

On Monday the Boston Evening American will publish the assembly schools for the Parochial School system and for schools in cities and towns outside of the city. Today's list is for the Boston Public School system alone.

School champion of Boston should make inquiry of the master of his assembly schools regarding the exact time set for the holding of the district bees during Friday. This inquiry should be made in person or by telephone before Thursday of next week.

In the following list all associated schools of each district named in a group will send their representatives to the school named in capital letters at the head of that group for the esta next Friday. The task is a simple one for the masters, inasmuch as a spelling group of nine will be maximum, and in most instances will total five.

Rescues Role for Harvard

Saving the day for harassed thespians, Miss Margaret Lang of Bay State rd., star of the Vincent show of 1930, now will play the lead female part in the Harvard Dramatic Club play, "Bride of the Unicorn." Withdrawal of Miss Marie Driscoll, Radcliffe graduate of Brookline, climaxed a series of "leading lady" troubles.

Margaret Lang, Socialite, Will Be 'Unicorn Bride'

Rising to the challenge hurled down by Radcliffe, a brilliant and beautiful Social Registrite today rallied to the support of the Harvard Dramatic Club.

Miss Margaret Lang of 209 Bay State rd., volunteered to take up a part in "A Bride for the Unicorn."

That is the play President Ada Comstock found too vividly realistic and clamorously alive for the cloistered young women of her institution.

She forbade them to help the Harvard boys by playing the leading roles.

Miss Lang will play "The Girl in the Mask," which is the principal part.

The role was surrendered last night by Miss Marie Driscoll, '31, Naples rd., Brookline, a Radcliffe graduate.

She said today her entry into the cast had always been purely tentative, and she had not expected to play if "Dramat" could find anyone else.

"Dr. Comstock's ban had nothing to do with it. I am a graduate, and am not under her jurisdiction," she stated.

"I did not resign because I thought the script too frank. I think it is a rollsking and vigorous paper."

Miss Lang is the Social Register pioneer in the cast of "Unicorn," which will be presented in less than two weeks.

Vincent Club and whatnot, she is also a comparatively experienced amateur actress. She has appeared in various shows given for charity.

Her mother was a talented amateur in her day and her father, Malcolm Lang, is a well-known amateur musician.

The young lady is about five feet four, dark, vivacious, and wears dark silk lounging robes in the morning.

That's the way the Evening American reporter found her. She wouldn't talk.

The hullabaloo over "A Bride for the Unicorn" was started by Dr. Comstock.

After reading the lines, she decided they were a little salty.

The Harvard boys had planned to use Radcliffe girls in the feminine roles and shs forbade it.

Later, Harvard authorities threatened to stop the show, but weakened and allowed rehearsals to go on. Other society girls are needed to fill all the roles.

M'KNIGHT GOES TO COURT

Edwin T. McKnight, former head of the closed Medford Trust Co., stepped out of the East Cambridge jail for the first time in months today.

In custody of jail guards, he walked across the street to Middlesex Superior Court, where he heard his counsel argue in behalf of a new trial on larceny charges.

Under the latter counts, McKnight is faced with a prison term of from four to five years, at the expiration of his house of correction sentence in another year.

Wearing the same suit in which he was convicted last April 25, McKnight stepped jauntily into the courtroom, looking healthier and with color in his face. He greeted his wife with a kiss and shook hands with several friends.

After hearing arguments by counsel and testimony from three witnesses, Judge Walter L. Collins continued the case until next Saturday. Most of the testimony concerned Antonio Frankini, star government witness at McKnight's trial.

U.S. REVOLT OUT SAYS EMMA

New York, April 21 (AP)—After eleven weeks' tour of the country, "Red Emma" Goldman, the anarchist, is convinced that there will be no overthrow of the old scheme of things in America.

"Despite all the talk one hears of revolutionary trends in American government," she declared, "America will be the last country in the world to have a revolution."

The reason, she said, is based on this phenomenon of the average American citizen's mind:

"He still believes that his son can some day become president. He still thinks he can become wealthy under the existing order."

Miss Goldman, as usual, gave a few concise definitions. They were:

Hitler—a nuisance; Mussolini—likewise; the League of Nations—an organization of old fossils, and Dr. William A. Wirt—"he hates obscurity."

Of President Roosevelt, she said just this:

"He has a marvelous voice on the radio."

U. S. Links Dope Ring in Lindbergh Kidnaping

Investigation of the alleged connection of "Lucky Bill" Lardner with the kidnaping and murder of the Lindbergh baby today resulted in a sweeping federal probe of a dope ring that is said to have supplied inmates of the East Cambridge Jail with narcotics in almost unlimited quantities.

It was in East Cambridge jail that Lardner, now a prisoner in the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., was lodged while he was held for government authorities.

First news of the narcotic ring investigation came today when a Department of Justice agent was sent to the jail. It was then quickly learned that Lardner had involved one of his "visitors" there as a dope peddler.

U. S. Marshal John J. Murphy admitted that a federal agent had been dispatched to Cambridge, but refused to make any further statement about the investigation.

In his office, however, it was rumored that the authorities were seeking two well-dressed women who visited Lardner during his incarceration.

Meanwhile, federal officials were preparing to question another woman, a wealthy, Park ave., New York, matron, who is rumored entangled with the Lindbergh suspect.

She is the third woman whose name has entered the investigation. According to U. S. Marshal John J. Murphy, she returned on the same boat with Lardner on his last trip to Europe and became confident with him.

"Then after her we hope to find out where he stayed in Europe," the marshal declared.

Lardner was arrested in a Boston hotel in January for trying to pass a counterfeit $100 bill, was convicted in federal court here and sentenced to three years in Leavenworth prison. He is there now.

Certain activities and connections of Lardner, all of which may or may not have been entirely revealed by U. S. agents, made it appear to them that Lardner was "in" on the Lindbergh case, it has been learned.

BUCKLE IS CLUE

It was a solid gold belt buckle that Lardner presented to Deputy Marshal Charles Burke here before he entered Leavenworth that pointed to Lardner having been to Europe. The buckle was bought in Switzerland.

Lindbergh ransom money had been recovered in Europe, and Lardner's reputed affiliations with the Roger Touhy "kidnap" mob of Chicago aroused further suspicions.

Dr. John F. "Jafsie" Condon of New York, Lindbergh kidnaping intermediary, has been given his way to various photographs of Lardner in the hope that he might identify him as one of the gangsters to whom he paid the $50,000 ransom money.

It was reported today that "Jafsie" had failed to recognize the first pictures he received, but other poses were forwarded to him. "Jafsie" was even to go his way to Leavenworth to confront Lardner, it was said.

Lardner himself has been placed in solitary confinement during the investigation.

BLONDE IS SOUGHT

As was revealed yesterday in the Boston Evening American, a blonde, "Marie Holmes," is sought for questioning in connection with Lardner's Boston visit. She is thought to have been with him here, since he was trying to buy airplane reservations for two with his bad $100 bill.

In addition to blonde Marie and the wealthy New York woman, a brunette "mouthpiece"—so-called by Lardner himself—was also an object of search.

When Lardner was in Grand Central station in New York, en route to Kansas with Deputy Marshal Kenney, he offered the latter $1000 if he would let the prisoner call her on the telephone, Kenney asserted.

"She's the best mouthpiece I ever had," he quoted Lardner as saying.

A dispatch from Washington today quoted J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Bureau of Investigation of the Department of Justice, as having stated that Lardner had nothing to do with the Lindbergh case, but this was hardly reconcilable with federal activity here, it was pointed out.

WANTS WHOLE STORY

The U. S. marshal in Boston, John J. Murphy, declared that he was going to find out all about Lardner, no matter how long it took.

He cited long-distance calls for Lardner after his arrest here, the fact that a chance of identification had been removed from his clothing, and the struggle that Lardner made against being finger-printed.

'Bullet in Head' Boy Shot Self

The mystery of the Lynn man with a bullet protruding from his forehead, which believed cleared up by police today. William Leary, 20, who was shot while stooping to pick up a cigaret, really shot himself, police said after George Sybeck, of Revere, gave his version of the accident.

The latter said Leary was demonstrating a "trick" revolver when it suddenly discharged as he held it against his head. Surgeons removed the slug but were somewhat puzzled by the story Leary told. Police believe Leary withheld the real story for fear he might get in trouble for having the weapon in his possession.

Roosevelt's College Chums Frolic At White House

Harvard College "boys" of 1904, many of them from Greater Boston, took no chances today with the possibility that President Roosevelt would be unable to attend their reunion in Cambridge in June, so they took over the White House instead.

As a result, the White House lawn took on the appearance today of the Harvard campus, when the President's classmates and their families, to the number of about 700, did a march on the usual June custom.

The President reserved the entire afternoon on his crowded office calendar for the "boys of '04." Mrs. Roosevelt saw to it that everybody made the most of the occasion. A big tent on the south lawn took care of refreshments.

Among those from Greater Boston were U. S. Dist. Atty. Francis J. W. Ford, Judge Edward A. Counihan, of Cambridge; James Jackson, Thomas Beale, president of the Second National Bank; Atty. Edward Taft, '94 secretary; Attys. Larue Brown, James Wolfe and Harry Bugbee, of Boston; Professors Thomas Winston and Edward Benson, of Boston high schools and Judge David Manning, of Peabody.

MEMBERSHIPS FOR JUNIOR BIRDMEN STARTING OUT TO ALL WING HEADQUARTERS; NEW FEATURES ARE READY

By LAWRENCE SHAW
National Director

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA,
Boston American, Boston Sunday Advertiser,
5 Winthrop Square, Boston, Mass.

Please enroll me as a member of this new nationwide junior organization for boys and girls. I pledge myself to become an active (Junior Birdman) (Junior Birdwoman)

I enclose a 10-cent coin to cover cost of Junior Birdmen wings and membership card, including mailing and postage.

My name .....

My address ..... (Number) (Street)

..... (City or Town) (State)

My age .....

(Fold your dime carefully in a piece of paper and attach it to the coupon.)

Greetings, members! Today we end the first week of our Junior Birdmen columns and with the details on how you will soon be able to organize a flight squadron of your own, which will appear in our regular Sunday column tomorrow in the Boston Sunday Advertiser, we will include the organization work of our club which is now well on its way.

Fired with the spirit of patriotism and air adventure, thousands of boys and girls are sending in applications. Reports from Junior Birdmen wing cities all over the country report favorable progress. The Junior Birdmen is already one of the largest organizations for boys and girls in the United States and will no doubt surpass all others in the near future. The daily mail continues to be heavy and thousands of boys and girls are enrolling for membership just the minute they hear about our organization and daily column.

Every Member Can Help

Every one of you members can help! Tell your friends about the Junior Birdmen, our features, our activities and our daily column. Certainly they will want to become members and help you in building one of those flight squadrons I will tell you about tomorrow. And when you get your wings and membership card, be sure you wear that beautiful emblem on your lapel, sweater or dress.

Be sure, too, that you always carry your membership card with you.

On Monday, when we start our first column feature, I will also have to have ready for you our first Junior Birdmen calendar. This calendar will be published in our column about once a week and will give you many date when various features and activities will be conducted for you.

The first feature, on Monday, is the air dictionary and I want every one of you members to be sure that you save every one of these installments. Keep them in your scrapbook where you may refer to them when it may become necessary for you to look up some word, phrase or aviation term with which you are not familiar. They will come in particularly handy when the beginner's course in model building begins.

Remember, too, that later on we are going to have a scrapbook contest so that it will be to your advantage to start now, and start right. Boys and girls joining the Junior Birdmen at a later date will be able to enter the scrapbook contest, too, but will lose several points on incompleteness, for they will be unable to obtain back copies of our columns.

By the way! Here's some flash news for you. Just as I am preparing this column for you news is received that our first activity is to start on Tuesday with an announcement of a gala contest for all members. A special message informs me that it will be an easy and yet intriguing activity that every member will want to enter and the prizes will be well worth your while competing for. There will be prizes for the selected winners chosen from entries of all Junior Birdmen cities.

Better Join Right Now!

If you are not a member of the Junior Birdmen, take my advice and join right now! Remember, unless you are a Junior Birdman or Birdwoman you will not be privileged to enter that contest we will announce on Wednesday. It is not to be a model plane contest or anything like that yet. It will be an activity that every boy and girl, Group "A" member or Group "B" member, will be able to enter. There will be two sets of prizes, one for each membership age group. Both sets of awards will be exactly alike so that the younger members will have the same opportunity to win the same prizes as the older members.

By the way, I have received hundreds of fine letters from members applying for membership in our New York wing and I wish that I could print them all for you in our column. Of course this is quite impossible, as it would take columns and columns of space. However, here are some excerpts from a few of them:

Helen Mae Schenkel, New York City—"I am sixteen years of age, and believe the Junior Birdmen of America is a marvelous thing for every boy and girl to take an interest in. I want to be one of the first girls to join. . . ."

Robert Johnston, Jersey City, N. J.—"I am much pleased to be able to join your Junior Birdmen of America organization. It is the greatest club yet offered to boys and girls."

Albert Davey Brooklyn, N. Y.—"Congratulations! I was surprised to hear about the Junior Birdmen and I hope my application is one of the first to be received by you. Judging from the other clubs you organized, Mr. Shaw, I am sure that this will be the greatest organization ever conducted for the youth of the nation, as well as our own city."

Theodore Femmel, Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I am enclosing membership application for the Junior Birdmen. As I have ambitions to be a flier, and believe I would make a capable aviator, I welcome this opportunity to join your club which I know will further my ambitions."

That is only four excerpts, and I wish I had room for more. But perhaps some other day we can include others.

Don't forget to read the directions for organizing your own flight charter in tomorrow's Boston Sunday Advertiser. And don't forget to look for the first installment of our air directionary on Monday.

HAPPY LANDINGS!

Van Zandt Views Bedford Hospital

James E. Van Zandt of Altoona, Pa., commander-in-chief, Veterans of Foreign Wars, today inspected the U. S. Veterans' Administration Hospital at Bedford following a breakfast tendered him by the ladies' auxiliary of the Massachusetts department.

Tonight Van Zandt is scheduled to give a radio talk from Station WHDH at 6:45 p. m. From there he will go to Hotel Bradford for a public reception and banquet in his honor. Among the guests invited are Gov. Ely, Mayor Mansfield and department commanders of three states.

ROXBURY COURT AGAIN LOOTED

Burglars, for the second time in a month, last night broke into West Roxbury courthouse in Morton st., the break being discovered today shortly before court sessions began.

George B. Stebbins, clerk of the court, who reported the break to the police, said that the safe, which contained money taken in during the day as fines, had not been molested.

He expressed the belief that the intruders may have been seeking court records. Police said it may have been merely a preliminary break to survey the layout for a more ambitious coup. They also were inclined to link the break to the recent burglary of Malden courthouse.

Police experts were detailed to make a thorough search for possible finger prints and other clues.

QUINCY COUPLE TO BE ORDAINED

A Wollaston couple—man and wife—will be ordained in the ministry of the Church of the Nazarene tomorrow afternoon in the Manchester Ct., high school auditorium. They are Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Earle. Edwin Ryan of Malden is also to be ordained.

The three passed examinations yesterday before the Church's Board of Orders and Relations, and Rev. John B. Chapman of Kansas City will preside at Sunday's ordination ceremonies.

The Earles have been licensed preachers for some time and are now in charge of a congregation at Woonsocket, R. I. He also serves as dean of men and she as matron at Eastern Nazarene College, Wollaston.

NEW PRAISE FOR EPIC CONTEST

"The Mount Rushmore Memorial Competition should inspire the whole country and have a marked influence on our social and political life," declares Fred W. Sargent, president of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial Commission, in a letter to the local Rushmore test editor at 5 Winthrop Square.

"The Mount Rushmore National Memorial being executed by Gutzon Borglum will become the first of our enduring monuments perpetuating in indestructible granite great epochs of our national history.

"Four Presidents represent these epochs. George Washington typifies the founding of the Republic. Thomas Jefferson gave us the Declargtion of Independence. Abraham Lincoln established the principle that the Union is one and inseparable and definitely reaffirmed by philosophy that ours is a government of, by and for all the people.

"Theodore Roosevelt marks an era of international trade expansion."

In the meantime texts entered in the competition are coming into the local headquarters every day.

Contestants are again warned that the contributions MUST NOT exceed 600 words and MUST be written on the nine epochs in American history that have been selected by the National Committee.

BEACH SCENE TO BE INTERNATIONAL -:- MEN WHO ARE UNCLAIMED PRIZES

Given in Marriage

—By Adele Garrison—

Philip Veritzen, dramatic producer, fighting to break up the romance between his son, Noel, and Mary, a budding Veritzen star, has decided to send her to Paris for a year of study. To thwart Veritzen's obvious intent to separate Mary and Noel, Madge proposes an immediate marriage. The insolence of the mysterious "Flos" and her complaint over the telephone that "the Dicky bird was 'holding out on her' about his being a married man," leaves Madge on the verge of collapse. The "Dicky-bird" strives to act nonchalantly when told of it, although his feathers are ruffled. With Dicky's walk out Madge is still in the dark. Madge and Lillian realize that Philip Veritzen's scheme to send Mary to Paris is based on the hope that Mary will renew her acquaintance with Prince Georges of Trees. Noel surprises Mary by approving his father's plans to send her to Paris for a year—alone! Mary, resenting Lillian's interference, rushes out of the house to forestall Noel's repentance "scene."

CHAPTER 18

Mary whirled on me as I asked her what she was going to do, following her rush to the door as she made the astounding conjecture that Lillian had taken Noel into her apartment "to try to fix things up."

"Do?" she queried. "What would any girl with self-respect do? Get out of here as fast as the law allows. Do you think I'm going to listen to any repentant swain saying, 'Mary, don't leave me,' after being incited to the plea by a kind-hearted dame who thinks she's doing me a favor? Oh, I know that sounds awfully snooty toward Lillian, and she, of course, thinks she's doing the best thing possible; but I'm not taking any charity, thank you."

"Mary, Mary," I sighed. "What am I ever going to do with you? You haven't the slightest grounds for belief that Mrs. Underwood saw Noel at all after he left."

"Nay, nay, 'doiling.' She has Noel sewed up over there, and pretty soon she'll be sending him over here all primed with romantic speeches. Well, he can make 'em to her or to you. Me—I'm going to be conspicuous by my absence."

"But," I tried a last ruse. "You told Noel to come back and look for hats with you. What shall I tell him?"

"Anything your fertile invention can think up," she said, with a saucy little moue at me. "You know a lot of words. But I'm going places and doing things. Don't expect me for dinner."

It was barely ten minutes later that another knock sounded upon my door, and it needed no psychologist to deduce that the hand whose knuckles were sounding that irregular knocking was trembling violently. I was not surprised when at my raised voice calling "Come in," Noel Veritzen burst through the door as if it were the finish tape of a relay race.

"Where is Mary?" he demanded.

MADGE CONSOLES NOEL

"I don't know," I said. "She left here about ten minutes ago, saying she wouldn't be back for dinner."

"Which way did she go?" He plunged toward the door.

"I haven't the slightest idea," I said coolly. "You couldn't possibly find her after this interval, as I'm sure she took a taxi. Please come back here and sit down, Noel. I want to talk to you, and I can't come over to you."

Purposely I must have reminded him of my inability to walk; purposely played upon the innate chivalry which is his. Nothing else, I knew, would keep him from dashing wildly after Mary, no matter how futile he knew the pursuit would be.

"Oh, I am so sorry!" he said contritely, and crossing the room took the chair by my couch, which I had indicated.

"Will you believe me, dear boy, when I tell you that if there were the slightest chance of your finding Mary, I should send you after her post haste?"

His hot fevered eyes held mine for an instant. Then his stiffness relaxed and he slumped against the cushions of the chair.

"Yes? I believe you, and I won't go after her until you think it best. But, oh, Mrs. Graham, I am so unhappy—so hurt! Mrs. Underwood has just showed me that paper—about Paris—and Georges.

"Of course I see what my father is trying to do. He never has given up the idea of separating us. As long as I thought the year there was just for Mary's training, and—that—she wanted to go, I wanted to—smother my own feelings, and try to be glad—for her.

"But now Mrs. Underwood has shown me what actual peril there may be for Mary in being thrown into that circle around Georges. He is a king now, you know, and if—if I could Mary the same attention there as he did over here that summer—if he fell in love with her again—I think he's always been in love with her—there might be unpleasant things said. And that must not be!"

His voice was raucous, unsteady. The last words came out almost in a shout.

Lillian had done her work well. Mary would go to Paris only after a battle royal with him. But it would be waged upon the premise that there would be danger of scandal for her in Paris, and I was afraid that he would keep unsaid, through pride, the one thing that would keep Mary at home.

"How do you know Mary wants to go?" I asked quietly.

Japanese Coat and Mexican Sombrero With Chinese Figured Swim Suit

By Dorothy Rae

THE INTERNATIONAL COMPLICATIONS grow in beach fashions.

From one side comes the Mexican influence, from the other the Chinese. And a girl who is trying to be patriotically American finds herself all at sea.

The Japanese note also has appeared in the advance showings of what will decorate our best beaches this summer, and there's a hint of Swiss intervention in the Tyrolean shorts and peaked hats already seen in the resort sections of Fifth ave. shops.

For the languorous brunette, there's nothing more effective than the Mexican mode in resort wear, with its vivid pottery colors and its dashing serapes and sombreros.

CARIOCA OUTFIT

If you yearn for the romantic costuming of a Mexican senorita, here's the 1934 recipe:

Start out with a brief swim suit of warm yellow, with halter neck and bodice bandings of orange and brown.

Add a terry cloth serape of the boldest and most vivid stripes you can find, accenting the pottery colors, rust, yellow, orange, clay and brown.

Pick out your beach sandals of awning cloth in the same colors, with wooden heels, and top it all off with a sombrero equipped with a brim as big as a wagon-wheel and a ten-gallon crown.

COOLIE BEACH HATS

If the Chinese motif appeals to you more, you may have a crocheted swing suit of Chinese jade green, and a suit of beach pajamas of white linen with Chinese hieroglyphics in orange or jade.

One of the flat coolie hats in lacquered straw will complete the picture.

The Japanese note is seen in the short fitted jackets with brief flares below the waist, and necklines high and close-fitting in the best Oriental tradition.

Some of these simulate the designs of old Japanese embroidery, appropriately braid-trimmed and bedizoned with dragons.

They are worn with straight blacks of the regulation variety, in either sailcloth or Jersey.

And the Tyrolean influence is seen in the knee-length shorts with brilliant suspenders and the inevitable Alpine hats, trimmed with feather and all.

Reception Not Necessary at Wedding

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

1—Please tell me whether it is ever correct to make a formal church wedding ceremony without a reception given either before or after the wedding?

2—Should all the invited guests to the wedding be invited to the reception, or should just intimate friends be invited to the reception?

3—Should a member of the wedding party entertain the other members of the party?

4—If the husband is a member of the wedding party, and the wedding party is entertained, is it correct for the wife to be invited also? NANCY.

1—Yes, it is entirely correct to have a formal church wedding ceremony without having a reception. As a matter of fact, many brides insist on doing this, insist on having only the religious part of the occasion, with no entry of the social side. And this, I must admit, is a pleasantly independent point of view about it. There is no reason in the world why a bride should feel that she must stretch her budget or the family's budget to include a reception, unless she wishes to do so. It isn't obligatory.

2—Very often a small reception is given, and to it there may be invited only a very few guests, close relatives and a very few close friends.

3—This often is done, but it isn't taken for granted.

4—Yes. If the husband is a member of the wedding party, it isn't necessary that the wife also be invited to be a member of the party. But always, for the festivities that are attendant on the wedding, the wife would always be included. Not to include her would be a serious breach of etiquette. The same thing is, of course, true when the wife is a member of the wedding party and the husband isn't.

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Should the reply to a wedding invitation always be as formal as the invitation, even when the bride is a relative or an intimate friend? G.

Yes, always, no matter what the relationship is. Besides the formal acceptance, the recipient may write a note, but the acknowledgment should be of exactly the same formality as the invitation.

Use Color Daringly

THERE is a lot of yellow in sports costumes for this spring, and dusty turquoise blue is another favorite. Lichen green, chartreuse, Parma violet, and bright clay orange are equally good. The trick is not to wear a get-up in one solid fashionable tone, however; it lies in setting off one main tone with another that is daring. A pencil blue flat silk or worsted scarf on a red-brown suit, or on a chartreuse frock; a green-dyed white fox collar on a Parma violet top coat;

Daily Suggestion for Self-Improvement

Always try to put unexpected visitors at their complete ease, no matter how inconvenient it may be for you to entertain them. Never allow them to suspect that they are unwelcome at that particular time.

LATEST FASHIONS

Navy taffeta has made a place for itself as an important spring evening fashion, and this adaptation of an outstanding Paray model combines the demureness of organdy bands, the enchanting swish of taffeta, and because of its clever cut, a sleekness as of satin. Miss Sally Byron of Wellesley Farms, one of this season's most prominent debutantes, models the Paray taffeta, which is from a Boston shop. For details on the gown Miss Byron models, phone Annics Brink, Liberty 4000 or write her at the Boston Evening American, inclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Pandora Tells You

By Annice Brink

Dear Pandora:

I've fallen hopelessly, desperately in love with a man, a bachelor, who, as far as women are concerned, can take 'em or leave 'em alone, but as regards the cup that cheers his shadow is perpetually crooked to lift it to his lips.

He's much older than I am, has absolutely no urge to achieve anything but the wherewithal for his daily bread—and noggins—and, I'm quite sure, wouldn't mass me if I walked out on him tomorrow. And yet, Pandora, in the face of all this lack of concern, I'm only happy when I'm in his company. I'd rather quarrel with him than have any other man I know make love to me a la Ramon Novarro.

But I'm so unsure of him. I am the one who has to suggest a dinner-date and if some unexpected thing comes up that makes it impossible for me to keep it he doesn't seem to mind at all, if he isn't actually relieved. Pandora, what can I do to make him care? MILLY.

DEAR MILLY:

You're probably a sensible girl in every other department but you can certainly go berserk in the cardiac sector. Where's your imagination? If you'd use a trace of it, you'd get a swell diagram of the utter misery resulting should you and this drinkity gentleman try double-harness. What a Komonon you must figure yourself to be if you think you could win a race with all the handicap set forth so graphically. Scram, baby, as if from a nine-years' plague.

Experts Develop Trick Bids

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

The experts who love to gather in the experts' room at Cockford's Club frequently develop bids that to the less informed look little short of miraculous but which, on the contrary, are founded on the soundest of logic.

In a recent session there Waldemar von Zedtwitz and Samuel Fry, Jr., were seated North and South respectively when the hands below were dealt by West, also a nationally known expert.

West, Dealer.
North and South vulnerable.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
5 ◇ (1)	Double (2)	4 ◇ (3)	5 ◇ (4)
Pass	6 ◇ (5)	Pass	7 ◇ (6)
Pass	Pass	Pass

(1) An endeavor to "steal" the hand if possible. West, as it afterwards developed, had seven diamonds to 100 honors.

(2) Mr. von Zedtwitz rightly prefers to double rather than bid three or four hearts or three or four spades. He does not know which of his suits, if either, will fit his partner's hand.

(3) A very fine defensive bid.

(4) A brilliant bid, showing a very strong hand opposite a Takeout Double.

(5) An equally brilliant bid as it precludes the possibility of playing the hand at six clubs and hence makes easier Mr. Fry's final bid.

(6) It is apparent to Mr. Fry that North cannot be expecting him to bid seven clubs and a bid of six hearts now would be entirely inadequate—hence the Grand Slam bid in hearts, the first time the suit is mentioned.

The contract was, of course, made without the slightest difficulty. In fact the only thing that could have defeated it would have been to find East void of the suit opened by his partner.

Rotund Kind Seen as Faithful to Wives---Ask Woman Who Has One

By Sheilah Graham

"LET ME HAVE men about me that are fat," said Julius Caesar a long time ago. The wise girl will echo his desire. She will people her horizon with the fattest men she can find.

A study of thin and fat husbands has convinced me the latter make the best husbands. They may not look the best, but in marriage it is far better to have inside good than outside glitter.

All you free, fat men brush your hair, clean your teeth and your fingernails. By the time I have finished extolling your merits there will be a rush equalling any gold rush in our direction.

The proverb "Nobody loves a fat man" is almost true. Nobody does—except the woman who marries him. Prowlers in search of passion and a triangle leave him severely alone.

I know only one fat man who dallied with a woman not his wife. One warm day he was walking in a park when to his delight he espied the lady of his unfaithful dreams sitting underneath a tree reading a book. With as much agility as he could muster he sprinted toward her, moisture on his brow and a declaration of love on his lips.

DIGNITY ROUTED

Emotion and heart palpitations—the result of his exertion —made speech difficult for him. He stood before her struggling for composure and words.

"I love you," he finally stammered. Then the lady did an unforgivable thing. She laughed. She laughed until the tears rolled down her cheeks.

"If you knew how funny you look—so red and hot looking and damp," she spluttered through her laughter which, needless to add, was the end of that little romance.

The fat man lacks speed. But who wants speed in a husband? Besides, what he lacks in speed he atones for in comfort. It is not conductive to marital bliss to have a husband always wanting to go places or one who walks miles in his nervous tramps inside his own home.

The average fat man desires nothing better than a jug of wine, a large meal, a large armchair, and his wife sitting beside him in the snugness of the home castle.

He is usually good tempered and consequently much easier to handle than if he were thin and erotic.

CALM IN A CRISIS

The fat man's strength lies in his rotundity. A puff of adversity has not the power to topple him over. He is good and heavy and able to resist the buffetings of fate. It is extremely satisfying to have a fat, solid man to lean against when trouble raises its ugly head. Ask the wife who owns one.

The fat man is usually calm in a domestic crisis. The only thing that can ruffle the smooth surface of his good nature is to keep him waiting for his food. So all a woman married to a fat man has to do to keep him happy is to "feed the brute."

Fat men are often accused of being lazy. They are not. Their bodies prevent them being physically nimble, but their brains do not follow suit.

The man who cannot speak can usually hear twice as well. So with the fat man. His body is heavy but his brain usually works twice as swiftly as that belonging to the narmal slim man.

Witness the men at the head of important corporations. The larger percentage of them have corporations of their own to match the importance of the business they control. They do the thinking while others do the running.

Delightful Old-Fashioned Recipes Are Revived

By MARTHA LEE

ANTIQUES—real ones—have always been sought after by collectors and decorators, but now it's not only the old old but the merely old of grandmother's day that has become fashionable. What was old-fashioned has now become new-fashioned.

Hats look like the nineties, details of frocks look like something out of Godey by Currier and Ives, and even out in Hollywood a famous screen-couple have done the living room in their expensive home in the period of grandmother's day— tidies, whatnots, gilded cuspidor and all!

The old-fashioned foods too should be in for a revival, and since some of the oldest are some of the best—why not? Grandmother's receipes may have been changed a little to insure success and take advantage of the new discoveries in food, but the old-fashioned remains. Cook them on your shining enamel stove, test with thermometers and serve on black glass—the old-fashioned flavor will cling 'round them still, if the recipe is right.

MRS. WHEELER'S APPLE SAUCE CAKE

2 cups flour
1 teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ teaspoon cloves
½ teaspoon salt
½ pkg. pasteurized dates
½ cup shortening
1 cup sugar
1 egg
1 cup hot, thick apple sauce

Mix and sift the dry ingredients. Slice the dates and mix through the dry ingredients with the finger tips. Cream the shortening, add the sugar slowly. Add the beaten egg, then the dry ingredients and the applesauce which has been strained, alternately. Pour into a cake pan which has been lined with paper, or well oiled and dusted with flour. Bake in a moderate oven (350 deg. F.) for 40 minutes.

GRANNY'S MARBLE CAKE

4 tbsps. butter
3 cups cake flour
¼ tsp. salt
1 egg
1 tsp. Vanilla
2½ tsps. baking powder
1 cup sugar
¾ cup milk
1 square chocolate
Red fruit coloring

Place butter in a mixing bowl; set in warm place to soften (it may be melted but should not be hot) while preparing the pans and measuring other ingredients. Sift the flour, sugar, salt, and baking powder into the bowl with butter. Add remaining ingredients. Beat vigorously until smooth. Divide batter into three equal parts, putting each in separate bowl. Melt chocolate and add to batter in one bowl; to second batter add fruit (or vegetable) coloring to make a delicate pink; leave third batter plain. Place in baking tin alternating spoonfuls of plain, pink and chocolate batters. Bake in moderate oven (325-350 deg. F.) for 50 minutes.

OLD TIME FILLED COOKIES

1¾ cups flour
1¼ tsps. baking powder
½ cup fat
½ cup sugar
1 egg yolk
½ tsp. vanilla
2 tbsps. milk

Sift the flour and baking powder together. Cream the fat; stir in sugar gradually. Stir in unbeaten egg yolk and the vanilla. Stir in about ¼ of the flour; stir in the milk, then the remainder of the flour. Pack the mixture firmly in butter cartons or shape dough into rolls about two inches in diameter, wrap in heavy waxed paper, twisting the ends. Chill molded dough thoroughly until very hard. While mixture is chilling prepare filling:

1-3 cup pasteurized dates (sliced)
1-3 cup raisins
1-3 cup figs, (sliced)
1 tbsp. white corn syrup
1 tbsp. butter
2 tbsps. orange or lemon juice
¼ cup chopped nuts.

Put all ingredients except nuts in a saucepan; stir over low heat until thick paste is formed; cool, stir in nuts. Cut chilled dough in thin slices. Place a level teaspoonful of filling in the center of each slice; press edges together firmly with finger tips; prick top slice with a fork to allow steam and air to escape. With a spatula lift cookies on to oiled baking sheet. Bake on top shelf in moderate oven (375 deg. F.) 10 minutes.

PERFUMED OIL IN BATH FOR EVENING BEAUTY; BENEFICIAL MASCARA ON CREAM BASE

Eye Makeup That Is Not Only Waterproof, but Promotes Growth of Lashes

By Carol Ames

BEAUTY BATHS, down through the ages, have been women's favorite method of attaining loveliness.

Poppea, Nero's lovely bride, who bathed daily in gallons of milk . . . the lovely Mary Queen of Scots, who bathed in rare wine . . . Aspasia, in olden times, who massaged her body with perfumed unguents . . . none of these famous beauties of history ever dreamed of the luxurious perfumed beauty baths, which are available at such small expense to all modern women.

Nowadays it's so simple to add to a few drops of fragrant bath oil or a handful of scented salts to a warm tubful of water—and transform it into a real beautifying ritual.

PERFUMED SUDS

Nothing is quite so refreshing to revitalize spirits and bodies after a long, wearisome day. Try a perfumed bath next time before going to the theater or out for an evening of dancing, and I'm sure you'll agree with me.

Among all the enchanting bath oils on the market I wonder if you've discovered my favorite—a grand new bath essence which is hauntingly fragrant and revitualizing. A bottle lasts a long time, too—for only ten drops or less delicatly scents an entire tubful of water. The fragrance lingers on unobtrusively for hours and hours.

ABOUT EYELASHES

Women in their late thirties, especially, often notice that their lashes are be inning to fade and lose their youthful luster. They need a touch of natural-looking mascara if they don't want their eyes to show the passing of the years.

In selecting mascara, by all means get one which won't break your lashes or make them brittle—or produce the artificial, sticky beads which are so unflattering.

Seemingly in answer to feminine prayers for a water-proof, brittle-proof mascara which won't smudge or rub off the lashes during the evening, a new water-proof one has just arrived in town. When I tried it, I found it always as marvelous through laughter, rains or tears. It doesn't smudge or streak, and won't even run if you let it get into the eyes accidentally. Comes in a tricky, folding case that looks exactly like a silvery, chubby lipstick when closed—compact and good-looking.

Made on a cream base, this water-proof mascara is said actually to benefit the lashes, promoting their growth and health. It looks beautifully natural on the lashes, and makes them fascinatingly silky and lustrous. Comes in blue, blue-green, and the conventional brown and black.

Wouldn't you like to know the name of the fragrant new bath essence and the water-proof mascara mentioned above—and where they may be purchased in Boston? Just telephone to Carol Ames, Liberty 4000. Or if you prefer inquiring by mail, enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a personal reply.

Discovery of Disease

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

No one will deny that great advances have been made in the methods of diagnosing the human ailments. The modern physician is equipped with instruments and apparatus which were unheard of a century ago. The discovery of the X-ray machine, fluoroscope and other scientific machines has made it possible to detect the nature of ailments quickly and accurately.

It is only within recent years that we have been able to detect certain glandular disturbances by means of a special instrument. This is the basal metabolism machine, and the test is known as taking the "basal metabolism."

By this examination there is determined the rate or amount of energy that the body exerts while at complete rest. It gives an index of the amount of fuel the body burns to keep the heart, lungs and other vital organs of the body working at a minimum rate.

The rate varies in individuals and is definitely influenced by certain diseases, particularly diseases of the glandular system. When the metabolic rate is increased, the condition is spoken of as "high." If the rate is decreased it is spoken of as "low" basal metabolism.

As a rule, the test is made in the morning before food has been taken, and at which time only a minimum amount of exertion has been expended. It is advisable that the patient rest for at least an hour before the test is started. This takes care of the excess energy that has been used in traveling to the doctor's office or hospital where the examination is made.

A successful test can only be obtained if the patient is completely relaxed. Emotional excitement, apprehension or fear, will give a false reading and be misleading.

As soon as the doctor believes the patient is thoroughly relaxed, a nose-piece is placed over the mouth. The nose is compressed by an applicator that resembles a clothespin. This prevents nasal breathing.

It is essential that all breathing take place through the mouthpiece, which is attached to an oxygen tank. The amount of oxygen consumed per minute is determined by a graphic record on a revolving disc.

In certain diseases, such as diseases of the thyroid gland, there may be an increase in the amount of oxygen consumed per minute. Of course, there are certain disturbances of the thyroid gland that lead to a decrease in this consumption and give a different reading. The readings are compared to those of a normal individual of the same height, weight, age and sex. One thing to remember is that a basal metabolism test is not a "cure"; it is one means of determining the cause of a disorder or of confirming a diagnosis.

Answers to Health Queries

L. S. Q.—I am a girl of 18, 5 feet 4 inches, and weigh about 140 pounds. What should I weigh? Ans: I have been troubled by a pain in the right side for about three years, lately it has become more severe. The pain is accompanied by a hard lump which can be felt. Would this be due to some disturbance of the appendix?

A.—You should weigh about 124 pounds. This would be about average for your age and height as determined by examination of a large number of persons. It would be rather difficult to diagnose the trouble without making an examination. Consult your doctor for his opinion and advice. Do not delay.

CHICKIE'S DAUGHTER -:- By Elenore Meherin

Saturday morning Pippin received a letter. It affected her piercingly.

"Dear Pippin: It's strange, isn't it that I'm so inarticulate and never able to say the things I feel—except the angry things. So now I have to write the goodbye I couldn't manage to tell as we sat on the dark cliff tonight. You never seemed more dear. Id like to be sitting with you yet, but I was afraid I might make a nuisance of myself. I don't want to do this. That's partly the reason I decided to leave so hastily. I intended, as you know, to wait till after commencement, but I realized the last time we went dancing that the delay would be useless as far as my hopes are concerned. You weren't with me that night at all, Pippin. You had a dreamy faraway shine in your eyes. Not for me!

"Yet I'm worried lest you be lonely this last quarter. I kept you from running around gaily with other fellows as you, being so young, had a right to do. Now you may not want to step out carelessly for you aren't much of a butterfly nor much of a rebel for all your bold patter.

"I think I know where your heart is, Pippin. I hope it's happily centered. But you won't marry for a year or two anyway. So I'm going to write and as long as you're free, I'm going to wait. Who knows but some wild chance may alter your feeling and you will send for me! Even though you do this in sadness and despair, it will come eventually to shining happiness, I know. Do you think I'm wishing you pain, Pippin? No, I'm not. I'm just seeing you as you sat there tonight with the mist in your eyes. Seeing you and loving you and wanting you. This is the goodbye, Golden Bells. I couldn't bring myself to say. Have you read the book and that fourteen years he waited for her voice to ring through the dark?

"Yours, Gregg."

She saw him as he stood in the cabin, flushed and his trembling hands on hers; saw him standing at the rail and waving. The loneliness she felt was nothing to the blank emptiness his absence would leave as the pallid days wore on. She knew this.

YOUTH PASSING AWAY

Already a wine-like flavor was gone. Gregg had a tang about him, a color. Even the reading of a poem was a thing to make your pulse jump. And always with him, you had the feeling that just around the corner was mystery; was dark, perplexing drama.

She had stood at the pier watching the white of his cabin schooner swung to see. Something of her youth passing away; something big and terrifying, oh, so young. She would not sit on a hill-top with a gruff, dreaming boy again making the old world new.

Chickie sat at the lunch table and looked into the girl's now pale but ardent face. It appeared as if the eyes were burning blue and the lips parted so wistfully.

"When you were a girl, mother, did you dream of traveling to far, strange places and having all sorts of rich, colored experiences?"

"I wanted all you now crave." "And you gave it up. You swept every golden chance away. Nearly every one does, isn't that so?"

SECRETLY SMILING

Chickie, reading so much more than the girl guessed, answered softly: "Yes—we toss it away. It's not as important. Instinctively we know this."

"Not as important as what?" "As love for which all woman wait."

Pippin flushed and glanced at her mother with challenge. Chickie went on, but secretly smiling: "Do you think I've had such a flat, uninteresting life?"

"Oh no! But then few women love and are loved in return as you are. You might have waited for this kind of love and never have wine it. Think of all the men who love girls who do not want them and the girls dreaming of men who will never care! At least a person would have the adventure!"

"But all the really satisfying adventures, Pippin, all the deep stirring experiences have the one setting always. You don't have to journey to the remote byways of distant worlds. The big things all happen right within the human heart.

SUPREME PRIVILEGE

"Travel is a great educator; it enlarges the mind. But the biggest adventure you will ever have, Pippin, will happen within the walls of you own home. No matter if you have seen a thousand countries and listened to the tales of a hundred Shehrazades, this adventure will eclipse them all."

"What do you mean, mother?" "The adventure of having your child."

Pippin looked at her with white, pitying indignation.

"But it's true, Pippin. Remember that I told you. Women don't half appreciate the supreme, incredible privilege. No research you might ever do in a laboratory could equal it; no poem you might write would be as fine as the most wildly splashed experience pales and is flat before the wonder of this."

That Saturday she worked all afternoon in the laboratory. Once in a while she found herself thinking: "Why did he need to go—I wish he hadn't gone!"

Finally when it was late, Kevin came in and closed the door. He said without prelude: "Pippin—what's the matter? What's happened to you?"

"What do you mean?"

"Did you flunk some of your courses? What kind of a jam are you in?"

LOVED AS FRIEND

He thought she looked like a little lost ghost.

She said, faintly: "I'm not in any jam. I've just lost a good friend. Gregg sailed for China yesterday."

He said softly in a hushed, startled way: "Oh! But why did you let him go if you were going to miss him like this? He would have stayed, wouldn't he?"

"He had this job, you know."

"You look absolutely bereft! So it was Gregg that you loved?" She clasped her hands and looked at them for a moment. "Yes! I love Gregg. Not as you mean—but greatly. It is not easy to lose a dear, loved friend. I may not see him ever again. It seems niggardly in life to rob us like this. Why couldn't I keep Gregg without having to marry him?"

He was leaning against the table. Now he reached down, took her two hands and smoothed them in his.

"Would that be very easy for Gregg, Pippin? Suppose you loved someone and longed for them. Would you want to be tormented seeing them, dancing with them if you knew you could never have them? Can you imagine how that would be, Pippin?"

"Yes—I can know how that would be!"

She didn't look up. He kept hold of her hands.

"So they've left you all alone, Pippin? If you care this much just for a friend, what would you do if a real, complete grief ever comes?"

"I'm not sunk, Kevin—not at all."

"But you rather want to be left alone? You wouldn't care to go dancing or to a theater or just somewhere for dinner quietly would you?"

"With you, Kevin?"

"Yes—with me.' He drew her gently and smiled into her eyes which had suddenly filled. "Can I make it up to you, sweetheart?"

New Ways of World Oppose War, Declares Rev. Kinsolving

By REV. DR. ARTHUR LEE KINSOLVING

Rector of Trinity Church

Is the average citizen aware that the Vinson Bill, authorizing a huge aircraft program, the immediate construction of 154 vessels of war, and an added expenditure for naval construction of $750,000,000 a year for the next five years, is now before the country?

Titular heads of 30 Christian communions recently went on record that "the spirit of war and the spirit of Christ can never be reconciled."

Is not the population in general now ready to make a choice? The pugnacious, combative person is far less tolerated in society than heretofore. We are no longer delayed in our progress over the roads by the black knight — a doughty gentleman who is feeling lusty this particular morning, and would fain joust with us.

The duel is now obsolete, as a method of settling disputes of honor. It was proved to be a nuisance, and often suicidal.

Is the world ready to apply reason to the war system? The most promising development of the past unsatisfactory 15 years has been the transition from the Rooseveltian (Theodore) to the Wilsonian mind. There is a marked growth of internationalism as a sentiment, and an increasing reluctance to rush to arms, like Kentucky mountaineers, on points of national honor. To this the most influential motive is the recognition that, like the duel, another war may well prove the annihilation of organized society, as well as the permanent bankruptcy of the world.

It is interesting to read the statistics of the early Quaker colony in Pennsylvania. While the womenfolk and children of both New England and Virginia were constantly slaughtered in Indian raids and reprisals, despite their doughty defenders, not one single drop of Christian blood was shed in the colony of Pennsylvania. In the other colonies, during those bitter years, three Friends lost their lives—two men and one woman—and they because they had lost faith in peace principles, and sought protection by force of arms. The rest of them went their ways unmolested.

The most subtle argument dissuading us from the pacifist position is, I think, the economic one. We have great treasure, and must safeguard it in the midst of an envious world. More than this, the emissaries of our economic expansion are often successful, and we must protect their winnings abroad. And as they are everywhere provoking bad will against us, we must make our armaments more strong than the growing resentment. It is here that Jesus' mind is most foreign to our own. Putting an entirely different value on the worth of material things, and undismayed by any prospect of poverty, He answers that our wealth is not worth the human cost in this protection. Nothing we enjoy in the way of financial dominance is worth the terrific cost of a world war.

Mrs. H. Curtis Wood, Jr., Will Attend Sister as Matron of Honor in Milton Church

Mr. Brown will give his daughter in marriage.

Ivory satin, made with long sleeves and a train from the waist, fashions the wedding gown worn with a tulle veil caught to a cap of old family rose point lace and a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and gardenias.

Mrs. H. Curtis Wood, Jr., a sister of the bride, is attending her as matron of honor and the two bridesmaids are Mrs. George P. Shagis and Miss Alice Graves. TRUE TO TYPE

12-Year-Old Fan Tells Nearly All About George Raft

By GILBERT SELDES

"REKKENIZIN the drawl in me verce," as Jimmie Durante has it, the young woman in front of me at the movie undertook to tell me all. She knew that I was a stranger to these parts (Brooklyn to be exact) and assumed that I had never been at the movies before. So when I said something about George Raft to my companions, mentioning the fact that he makes a dazzling and sinister menace on the screen, she turned and sighed, "is he good, oh, boy, is he good!" No cold print will give the rising ecstasy of those last three words. I agreed that he was good.

She told me all about him. For a time I thought she might be his 12-year-old sister—it somehow had got into my mind that Raft was a Brooklyn boy. Presently, however, I knew what I was meeting, for the first time a movie fan who lives on movie magazines. What she thought she was meeting, I dare not go into. Nothing much, I suspect; because she spelled out for me the names of various movies in which Raft had appeared and the names, also, of theaters at which I might catch them.

SHE knew about Mr. Raft's early career and about his plans for the future. She knew his leading women or the stars for whom he had been leading man, and she had pronounced opinions about them. I should say that most of this went on during the stage show; the little lady was not interested in the magnificent comedy of Jimmie Savo; I was, but there was no quarreling with her flow of information. She was waiting for Raft to appear in person.

Unfortunately for her, he did not appear in the costume to which she was accustomed. He sauntered out of a green spotlight into a carioca. "That part was danced by"—I didn't get the name, "in 'Flying Down to Rio'" she told me. There was a terrific outburst of applause. The young woman turned to me and said, "Is that Georgie Raft?" I assured her it was. She spied a seat fifty rows nearer the stage and went to it.

MR. RAFT ("Georgie" to his young admirer) was all right, although I prefer his villainy to his dancing. But when the show was over I wondered about the young woman. I wondered whether she was one of those who, according to Variety's investigation, do not know what the radio stars are advertising. (She has nothing on me, there. I am developing a remarkably deaf ear and now buy only such commodities as are offered in spoken and closing plugs lasting no longer than 30 seconds each.)

I wondered how the movie magazines are getting on—it's weeks since I've been on a train. And I wondered what she would tell her brothers and sisters about George Raft when she got home. I know I ought to have asked her what she thought of the President and whether she was proud of Brooklyn's centenary and whether the recognition of Russia would be a danger to this country. But it was her afternoon to talk, not mine. And she didn't ask me any questions.

"B as in benevolence—E as in elocution—E as in effervescent—R as in religious—beer, you mugg—beer!"

Aftermath

I AM but one of whom words give no power,
For telling wisdom; silence is my bongue
As I walk mute as voiceless earth among
The shadows of this dusk's transcendent hour.

Seeking to find what no man may discover
Within his thoughts. Even the winds are still
Upon the moorlands and upon the hill;
Night brings no answer from the vanished lover.

Life was her passion and the earth her place;
So let her lie and may all sorrow cease.
Let him, who will proclaim her classic face
A remnant of the glory that was Greece;

Tonight I shall sit silent, out of grace,
Alone with memory, at peace with peace.

Carl John Bostelmann.

Coddled Collegians

THE extent to which American college students are being mollycoddled nowadays is appalling.

Isn't it shocking to learn that a reputable educational institution has done away with all 8 a. m. classes for the simple reason that it wanted to permit the students to sleep later in the morning! This actually occurred at the University of Rochester!

And at Northwestern University Prof. Baker Brownell has been heatedly agitating for the installation of Morris chairs for the students in lecture halls—and shamelessly recommending plenty of cushions!

At the University of Missouri students are furnished organ recitals during examination week, so that their taxed minds may be sweetly relaxed and tranquilized.

And the authorities at the University of Illinois have spent hundreds of dollars in experimenting with a tanbark covering for their athletic field. Saturated with solicitude they wanted to gently cushion the falls of football players! —W. E. F.

BEAUTY AIR

Gracious, Effective Lines Most Important

GERTRUDE ATHERTON

"WHAT do you mean," I have been asked, "by the beauty air, and by makeup lowering the standard of beauty?"

Well, I ask you to remember that in the days of famous beauties none of them, off the stage at least, could lay claim to that proud title who did not have a radiant complexion of her own. It might be delicately tinted (with natural shadows) of a "luminous pallor," but it was never overlaid with a coat of paint. Many women owed their reputation for beauty to an exquisite complexion alone, and no girl or woman in private life could hope to enter their class whose natural pigments were below par.

Today, those whom nature has favored with beauty both of line and skin make up merely because it is the fashion, and consequently the rather plain girl as skilfully artificed is often quite as effective. Nothing so demonstrates the transcendent importance of coloring, and it is for this reason that beauty parlors make stacks of money even in times of economic depression.

Massage, rouge, powders of various tints, creams, lipsticks, to say nothing of hair treatments, would coax the last dollar out of a hungry purse. So pre-eminent is the preference for beauty of color over beauty of line that you hear of one nose being reformed to trillions of makeups. The English "professional beauties" had both, and so had some of our own. Therefore, unless we should go Communist and abolish beauty aids, no woman can hope to have sonnets written to her complexion, even if she owns one in her own right. But she might—and this brings me to the Beauty Air.

YEARS ago a girl said to me: "It is tragic to be the sister of a famous beauty. No one ever looks at me when Helen is in the room." "But, Lottie," I replied, "Helen is not really a beauty. She has an eye but nothing else in the way of feature. She puts it over with her complexion and her beauty air."

"What do you mean by that last?" she asked sharply. "I mean that she enters a room with the serene self-assurance of a beauty who expects everybody to bow down before her. And everybody does. And of course she has figure and knows how to dress. Your trouble is lack of confidence and courage. You express your sense of inferiority by your carriage, and as you have a dingy complexion you should summon up courage (!) and use rouge and powder."

It was some time before she experimented with the rouge pot and powder puff, but shortly after a woman said to me: "The funniest thing! I went to a tea at a hotel the other day and when I left whom should I see but Lottie Collum marching up and down, up and down the corridor, her head in the air, her chest stuck out. What do you suppose?" I kept my counsel. She was never able to out-bluff her sister, who had more brains and subtlety, but she made a very good match.

NOW that girls are holding themselves erect once more it is possible they may become beauty-conscious, even to disposing of sunburn. But if those whom nature has endowed with contours, profile, fine eyes and shapely lips would revive the beauty tradition they must go a step further and cultivate gracious curves where nature intended curves to be. A picture is not half so effective without a frame, a bust without a pedestal, a single rose without a vase. Even with complexions at a discount we might have Beauties again, more especially if they will cultivate the "air."

FRIENDSHIPS

Love Is the Strongest Interest of Women

Declares EMIL LUDWIG

LOCARNO—Some further thoughts on the question of friendship which I considered in my last article:

Is friendship between people of the same age likelier than between those of different ages? In youth very fine relationships are sometimes formed between older and younger people, "crushes" which later become established as life-long friendships. In later life a man feels himself chiefly drawn toward people whose experience of the world is similar to his own, and therefore to people of similar age.

As for friendships among women: Why are history and literature full of male friendships and so empty of true friendships between women? The cause lies not alone in women's stronger interest in love, but also in their stronger sense of monopoly. In general woman wants to possess—husband, children, property. She wants to possess because she is by nature endowed to preserve.

But friendship is the contrary of possession, it is a continual test, and whoever thinks his friend has given him a pledge of life-long loyalty is a fortunate exception; otherwise he is doomed to disappointment. Once on a quiet evening I wrote on a page the names of those whom I would call my friends. When as I came to each one I asked myself whether he would remain true to me under all circumstances, my pencil struck out many a name, and not even half of them were left.

MARRIAGE is the worst enemy of all friendships, whether it is yourself who marries or your former friend. A relationship that has unobtrusively developed between two men or two women in the quiet starlight of friendship, always in secret and meant for four eyes only, is suddenly required to continue in the sunlight of two couples, two households, and under the inspection of eight eyes. The thing that bound me to a friend was not the part of me that drew me toward a woman or that attracted her to me; perhaps it was that very side of me which my friend only put up with through patience. And must this test now be doubly undergone by two couples?

Only people of the greatest tolerance and most exquisite tact can effect this miracle. As a rule all youthful friendships end when their participants marry, and it is only much later on that they carefully start new ones, which must be cared for and watered like plants set out in late Summer so that they may bloom in the Fall.

FIRST CHAPTERS

Advantages of the Cinema in Novel's Opening

By G. K. CHESTERTON

LONDON.—I see that another of the competitions on the merits of masterpieces has been started; this time apparently revolving round the selection of the best opening chapter in a novel. I have already explained that I totally disbelieve in the intellectual value of all such comparisons; they seem to me a futile rebellion of the mechanical modern mind against the obvious fact that all the things that are most to be valued cannot possibly be measured.

You cannot arrange sunsets like the colors of jockeys in a row relative to a winning-post; and even if you think you can say that Shakespeare is better than Shelley you cannot possibly say that he is four times better than Shelley.

At the best the occupation is an excusable excuse for people talking about the subject of the books they like. In the case of unscrupulous and irresponsible characters like myself, it is more often an excuse for wandering as far as possible from the subject and talking about whatever I choose.

THE first thing that occurs to me to say about this question in itself is that it is likely to be both general and unconvincing; because I strongly suspect that a certain section of the rising generation has read the first chapter of the classics of fiction, and then left off. And I doubt if it is very profitable that they should describe the books that bored them, even if they can point to the precise stage of the narrative at which they became insupportably bored. The second thing that strikes me about this particular section is that many of them firmly believe they have read the great works of fiction because they have seen some sort of foggy burlesque of them on the film.

One of the most curious things about the film, not unconnected with the first chapter, is that it has often failed exactly where it was fitted to succeed. The advantage of the cinema over the theatre is that it can give perspective and middle distance; for which reason it long prided itself on being "close-up."

For instance, there never was a finer opening than the first glimpse of Mr. Hyde in Stevenson's story, where everything depended on the unhuman figure being a mere dot in the distance. The horror did not consist in anything he did, but in what he did not do. He simply stepped on a child by accident and did not stop. That given instantly the chill of a man stone. Transferred to other media, the theatre and the cinema, he tends to become a palpable palpitating maniac, leaping on a simple maiden with the antics of Jack the Ripper.

Now the first scene could only have been done properly on the film; the other could have been done any how in any melodrama.

OF course, there are other novels with excellent openings that could only be excellent in novels. Few are better than that in which Major Pendennis sits comfortably in his club opening his letters and leaving family letters to the last. The family letters contain all the emotional explosives of the story; the rash vows of the young lover; the despairing wail of the widow.

Now you cannot read letters in a play or a film; the scene would be simply a bore. In the film, I have a horrid fear that the club scene would be alternated with glimpses from afar, of the nephew tearing his hair in the woodland or the widow weeping under the moon's pale ray. But in the novel the club scene contains much more. The callous vexation of the Major brings out the contrast much more and contains the moral of the story, which is that young Pendennis will ultimately subscribe into the world of old Pendennis; and the club which is the first scene is also in a sense the last.

Fog

NIGHT'S view is pleasanter than day's—
Day's harsh and glaring light
The tender optic nerve dismays
And jars the sense of sight.

So when the velvet fog descends
I greet it with delight
In gratitude that nature lends
This extra bit of night.

More Butter

BY FRANK SULLIVAN

AUNT SARAH GALLUP, 203-year-old heroine of the American Revolution, was lunching with Miss Martha Hepplethwaite and the writer. Miss Hepplethwaite is the noted beauty.

"More butter," Miss Hepplethwaite said to the writer.

"More butter?" I echoed, gazing at the slim Miss H. in astonishment.

"More butter," she repeated, firmly.

The bus boy murmured, "more butter."

"More butter—for you, Martha?" I said to Miss H.

"Yes," she explained, "the beauticians have decided that the ideal girl for the coming year must weigh 134 pounds as opposed to 115 pounds for last year's ideal girl. That means I have to put nineteen pounds to keep my title. So, you see, more butter."

* * *

"HOW much did you say this ideal girl would have to weigh?" Aunt Sarah asked.

"One hundred and thirty-four pounds," Miss Hepplethwaite replied.

"Good night!" said Miss Gallup. "In the days when I was an ideal girl in those days. She couldn't afford to creak the way you namby-pamby little flossies do nowadays."

"I don't creak," said Miss Hepplethwaite with asperity.

"YOU do, too," retorted Aunt Sarah.

"Every time you laugh your make-up cracks and your face makes a noise like the ice on Lake Champlain on a Winter night. Comes from watching those calories too much. Calories! You girls are always talking about calories. When I was a girl a calory was a place in a theatre above the orchestra."

"I don't—" Miss Hepplethwaite began.

"In my day," continued Aunt Sarah, "a girl had ways of keeping the roses in her cheeks. Logging, for instance, or plowing. Another thing, the ideal girl in upper New York State in those days had to be able to handle six red coats in single combat. And there was the Indians. Ah, there's nothing like fighting off Indians to put the color into a girl's cheeks."

"Did you fight off many, Aunt Sarah?"

"I fit off them I didn't like. There was some I did like. There was some mighty handsome lads among the Iroquois when I was an ideal girl. Those were the days before the Indians took to wearing pug hats to war dances."

"When you liked an Indian, Aunt Sarah—"

"When I liked one, I liked him. We were simple folk in the Adirondacks and direct. If I didn't like an Indian, I fit him off. If I liked him, he gen'lly had to fight me off."

"Any ever get away on you, Aunt Sarah?"

"I WAS never the kind of ideal girl that kisses and tells," said the aged beauty. "All I'll say is some o' my best friends were heroes. And as for you, young Miss Pilsberry-gilbert Hepplethwaite, it wouldn't do you any harm to practice haulin' in some timber."

"Why should I?" demanded Miss Hepplethwaite. "There aren't any Indians to fight off these days."

"Beg pardon, Miss," said the waiter, "my mother was an Ojibway."

Placing his hand to his mouth he yodelled the Ojibway war cry.

Miss Hepplethwaite looked at him and smiled: he was quite comely for an Ojibway.

"More butter," she said, softly.

ALLOW ME TO SAY By C. HANSON TOWNE

MUCH has been said and printed lately about the tremendous sales of certain books of poetry; and it is surprising and heartening to learn that Kipling has been a best-seller for 45 years; that his Barrack Room Ballads still is popular, and that If, on illuminated cards, has reached the unbelievable record of over 400,000 copies.

I imagine that some other poets have found it far from unprofitable to write verse. Alfred Noyes must have reaped a harvest, particularly during those years when he was lecturing in America. There is scarcely a library that does not contain some of his work.

YEATS must have sold enormously. I have seen shelves containing his Poems and Plays in the most out-of-the-way hamlets, and after he received the Nobel Prize his sales mounted until he sold like a popular novelist.

There was an edition of Ella Wheeler Wilcox's Poems of Passion issued by a Chicago firm which went to press with the regularity of a clock. Every farmer's wife in the land bought a copy, and it was always on the center table in the "parlor," along with the family Bible and the plush family album. Mrs. Wilcox's royalties were very great, and up to the day of her death I suppose she received the largest fan mail of any writer in America. A single quatrain of hers,

So many Gods, so many creeds,
So many ways that wound and wind,
While just the art of being kind
Is all the sad world needs—

sold on illuminated cards, exactly as Kipling's If was printed, and the sales netted her a small fortune.

Mrs. Wilcox was never able to speak in public, so her sales were not augmented by appearances upon the lecture platform. Even the radio would have terrified her; but in the days when everyone was making records, she told me that once she slipped down to New York with a prepared speech which she wished preserved for her husband in the event of her death before his. Later, when she heard it, she laughingly said that it was so unsuccessful—a mere garble of undistinguishable words—that she broke it into a thousand fragments.

EDWIN MARKHAM'S "The Man with the Hoe has gone into numerous editions, and has been translated into every language, and no poet has ever won more prizes. He can write to order more easily than anyone I know. Asked to prepare some lines for a Lincoln dinner, he wrote his now famous ode on the day of the banquet, and finished it on a ferryboat on his way to deliver it. Some critics consider it his finest poem.

Depression Note

IF I had my way
I'd never say nay
To people who asked for
The right time of day.

But like a good sport
With friendly retort
I'd give them a speedy
And faithful report.

By the hands of the clock
And the god of tick, tock,
I'd do what I say, but—
My watch is in hock.

VAGABONDIA

For BRUNO LESSING

PESCARA.—On to Roccaraso, where I intended to put up for the night. The snow became thicker and thicker, both on the ground and in the air. The windshield wiper was out of commission. I had noticed for several months that it never worked when it rained and had intended to speak to Rene about it. But in good weather I never thought of it and I suppose Rene's mind worked the same way. There was nothing for him to do but lower a side window and look out, as railroad engineers and firemen look out of their engine cab. And get all that snow in his face.

Roccaraso at last! And to my horror I found it was a skiing resort. And cold. And all covered with snow. No one had tipped me off to this revelation. The place was alive with young people pushing themselves around on skis. I saw the platform of a chair that led down some incline. It was crowded with skiers. The girls in gaily colored sweaters and caps, the young men in blizzard garments. All had red cheeks. And I nearly had a fit.

WHAT hotel?" asked Rene. "No hotel," said I. "Keep on going and let's get out of these darn mountains."

I'm sure that if I were eighteen years old I'd love skiing. I used to love belly-whopping down a hill in Central Park on a sled when I was a kid. But I'm not eighteen. If you'll whisper it not in Gath, I'll admit that I'm over thirty. So overeth, in fact, that I forget what thirty looks like. Skiing appeals to me as much as playing jacks or marbles. And I hate cold. And while I love and admire the thought of snow, its presence gives me a severe pain.

"Let's go on," I said. And we on'd and on'd.

NO SOONER had we left Roccaraso when we found ourselves in the "Frozen North." Nothing but snow in sight. In Sunny Italy, mind you, and in early Spring. Luckily the road was smooth and snow cleaners had been at work. And even though we kept going higher and higher there were no precipices on either side or, if there were, they were filled with snow and I didn't get the sinking feeling of looking down into depths. Occasionally, though, I caught a glimpse of a bunch of vegetation sticking out of the snow here or there and wondered if it were just a little bush or the top on a one hundred-foot tree.

The snow was falling so thick and so fast that you couldn't see twenty feet ahead. The only guide was the row of stone posts on each side of the road with their black tops. Those posts are about four feet high but sometimes you could only see an inch of the top.

YES, sir, we were up in Northwestern Canada or the Swiss Alps. And a couple of monks came out of St. Bernard dog with a little keg of brandy tied to his neck would have fitted beautifully into the picture. (Good idea. Why would I have welcomed that dog!) All this time Rene was either poking his head out of the side window and trying to keep the snow off his face or trying to manipulate the windshield wiper by hand.

It got colder and colder. We wrapped up more snugly around us but I began to worry about Rene. He was working like a little demon. He had to keep his side window open because the windshield was opaque with frost. Between steering and bobbing his head in and out of the window to peer ahead he was busier than he had ever been before in his life. I was sure that he was freezing and suffering. I remembered that I had a bottle of brandy in a suitcase on top of th car and I thought that a nip of it would do him good. I tapped on the front window and he slowed down and turned around.

He was grinning. He was having the time of his life.

YES, hereafter when Francine looks up from her French newspaper and tells him about a terrible blizzard in Dakota, I'm sure that Rene will just smile condescendingly.

It lasted about two hours and then began the down and down. The snow on the ground became thinner and patchier and, gradually, the snow in the air turned to rain. Presently we struck the lowland and even the rain stopped. And, would you believe it, the darn windshield wiper began to work, sweeping rhythmically back and forth, cleaning a perfectly dry pane of glass. Even Rene, being a man, let go the wheel and thrust both his arms upward, in a can-you-beat-it? gesture.

THROUGH Sulmona. Here in 43 B. C. Ovid was born. A great poet who had insight into human passions. His works are not admitted to convents where young girls are being educated, but wise old people, who have been through the mill or life, nod their heads sadly when they read his writings and say, "Yes. He's right."

As we passed through the main square of the town I saw a statue of Ovid. In his toga, with his chin resting on his hand. Born here 1970 years ago. What a long stretch of time! And yet, if you take the trouble to obtain one of his books, he will talk to you.

Belated Thanks

BEAUTY I have drunk with you
As from a thousand cups;
The gratitude I meant to say
A parting interrupts.

Beauty I have drunk with you,
And, thanks to you, I part
Bearing, because of what you gave,
Enough to fill my heart.

Charles Dickens

during his ardent courtship of Maria. This picture was taken when Dickens was about twenty-two. In addition to his newspaper work, where his talent was not yet showing, he was a very clever, amateur actor.

Maria Beadnell

As Dickens knew her in the days of his youthful ardent courtship. He confessed himself, entranced by her eyebrows "which had a tendency to meet." The whole world knows Maria as "Dora," in David Copperfield.

The Romantic and Beautiful

Love Letters of Charles Dickens

Never Before Revealed to the Public

(These charming and beautiful love letters constitute a dramatic autobiography in themselves, far more intimate, more sincere, more glowing than any he would have written had he not for the moment been completely subjugated by the remembrance of the one and only great love of his life.)

These enchanting letters — from originals in Dickens' own handwriting — constitute

Two Amazing Interludes

in the great drama of his life

The First Interlude

Burning, fervid youth

An all consuming love for the beautiful Maria Beadnell, filled the four years of Dickens' life from nineteen to twenty-two (1830-1833). It was a period filled with the greatest joy and ecstacy for the lovers alternating with moments of supreme anguish. This "First Interlude" witnessed the heartbreak of one of England's greatest geniuses.

The Second Interlude

Two and twenty were "the years that the locust hath eaten" ere Maria again entered the life of the lover she had formerly scorned. Dickens was now a world figure, feted by Royalty. So deep was the impress she had made upon his heart, in his youth, that he welcomed her with an ardent fervor that must have surprised and overwhelmed her. The circumstances, as preserved in Dickens' own letters to Maria, surpass fiction.

Bowser's Wrestlers In Children's Hour At Boston Garden

The Pigeons of Yesterday; Value of Saving Race Stubs

By AUSTEN LAKE

Bless their simple, carefree hearts. There is nothing more melting than to watch a wrestler at play, unless it is ten wrestlers at play, frisking away childhood's happy hour in the Garden's ole swimmin' hole like barefoot urchins. There they were last night,

Freddy Moran and Dickie Stahl and Jimmy Wallis and a batch of other Bowser kiddies, teetering on the gunwales of canoes, like huge hunks of steer beef, and whacking away at each other with long padded poles.

It was scarcely anytime, my dears, before all had hit the water with big geyser splashes, overturning their navies and ducking their paddlers, at which point the rules of canoe tilting say they should have waded ashore, gurgling and giggling like nice little boys. But Freddy and Dickie and Jimmy, stood up to their fat tummies and went on whacking with their padded poles and hitting each other some very handsome licks indeed.

AUSTEN LAKE

For the better part of half an hour they wallowed like porpoises, snatching each other under water until you could only tell by bubbles and whirlpools where Freddy and Dickie and Jimmy went down, with only a hazy suspicion that they might ever come up again.

The funny part of it was that they did it all for nothing, free and gratis, and they had such a good time, the darling hulks, that they asked Mr. Harold Dibbles, who runs the Garden, could they please come tonight and do it all over again. And Mr. Dibbles said "Yes," if they would not kick the bottom out of his canvas lake and let it leak out over his expensive scenery. So they said "Goodie" and promised to bring some more of the Bowser boys, like Bull Martin and Charlie-warlie Strack.

Pigeons That No Longer Strut

Where are the pigeons of yesteryear which used to cakewalk along the overhead girders at Fenway Park in the old tumbledown days? Hardly a pigeon now struts or flutters where generations of papa and mamma pigeons raised large families and built happy homes under the eaves of the grandstand.

It is only a little detail, but it shows Boston fans how exacting Tom Yawkey's engineers were in considering the welfare of their clients. They caused the inside girders to be built so tightly to the roof that a pigeon would have to be shaped like a French roll to squeeze underneath, and the result is that folk, with new hats, nowadays can watch the ball games without keeping one eye on the ceiling.

One of these pigeons, probably long since gathered to his rest, has become immortal in the old park's tradition. For, one day, while the Red Sox were playing a tight game with Detroit, Ira Flagstead—I think it was Ira—hit a low liner toward center field. A pigeon swooped low across the flight of the ball and swerved sharply, so that Elias Funk, Tiger centerfielder, mistook the bird for the ball and went galloping off in pursuit. Too late he discovered his mistake, and by that time the ball had rolled out where the woodbine twineth and the game of ball was over.

Sometimes there is virtue even in failure. For example, you wouldn't think that these little colored race coupons, which customers at Rockingham last year tore up in confetti bits or scattered whole after their nags had blown a fuse in the stretch, had any value. You recall, perhaps, how the lawns and the pavements were cluttered with these tinted stubs, usually cast aside with a cuss.

Maybe you don't know that for some years, certain frowsy swipes have made side money around the country by gathering these stubs and selling them to other richer and none the less disreputable parties as evidence of gambling losses, wherewith to dodge federal income taxes.

So, next summer, when Rockingham resumes, do you pocket these red, blue, green and yellow slips after your nag has paused in mid flight to nibble buttercups under the infield rail, and file them away against the time that the federal income collector calls you to judgment.

There is a bill now before Congress, concerning the deductability of wagering losses in tax returns, and if passed, will require a strictly detailed record and tangible proof, of all racing losses.

Holy Cross Makes Up With Major Leagues

Holy Cross, which in the past has staged many a wordy battle with major league clubs, and particularly with Judge Landis, over the habit of raiding its student stars and bearing them off to big time slavery, is fraternizing with these same people this spring. Four games with major league teams, including the one played with the Braves, have already been scheduled, the Giants, Brooklyn and the Red Sox being the others thus far.

Purpose, according to Director Tom McCabe, is to restore Holy Cross baseball prestige to its old grandeur, and coax more revenue into the treasury. For, where H. C. cleared $35,000 during the 1929 season, last year it lost 7000 very painful dollars.

I remember with what fury Cleo O'Donnell wired Judge Landis when the Yankees snatched Frank Nekola's body out of college in June of 1929 sugaring the lad with a $17,000 bonus and a $5000 salary, with a contract clause which promised not to shoo him to the minors for a year.

O'Donnell called it "insidious proselyting," though at the moment there were several thousands of other college players who were fairly slavering to be similarly decoyed.

BOSTON GIRL BEATEN FOR NET TITLE

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., April 21 (INS)—Jane Sharp, Pasadena, Cal., won the Mason and Dixon women's singles tennis championship today, defeating Kathryn Winthrop, of Boston, former national girls' champion, in the final round, 6—3, 8—6

Miss Sharp has not lost a match since her defeat by Margery Sachs of Boston in the final of the Bermuda championship early last month, and her victory today marked her second successive championship title following her north and south triumph last Saturday at Pinehurst

Today it was largely a question of the California girl's superior control. She won the first set rather easily, maintaining a deep court attack, but forced Miss Winthrop to stick close to her own base line.

Resuming the singles semi-final match postponed yesterday after two sets were played, Frank Shields, No. 1 ranking U. S. player, defeated Marcel Rainville, Canadian Davis cup star, 6—3, 6—8, 6—1, 6—2.

In striking contrast to his careless and erratic playing in yesterday's two sets, Shields was in top form today. Rainville never had a chance against the crushing attack of the American ace.

The finals will be played tomorrow morning.

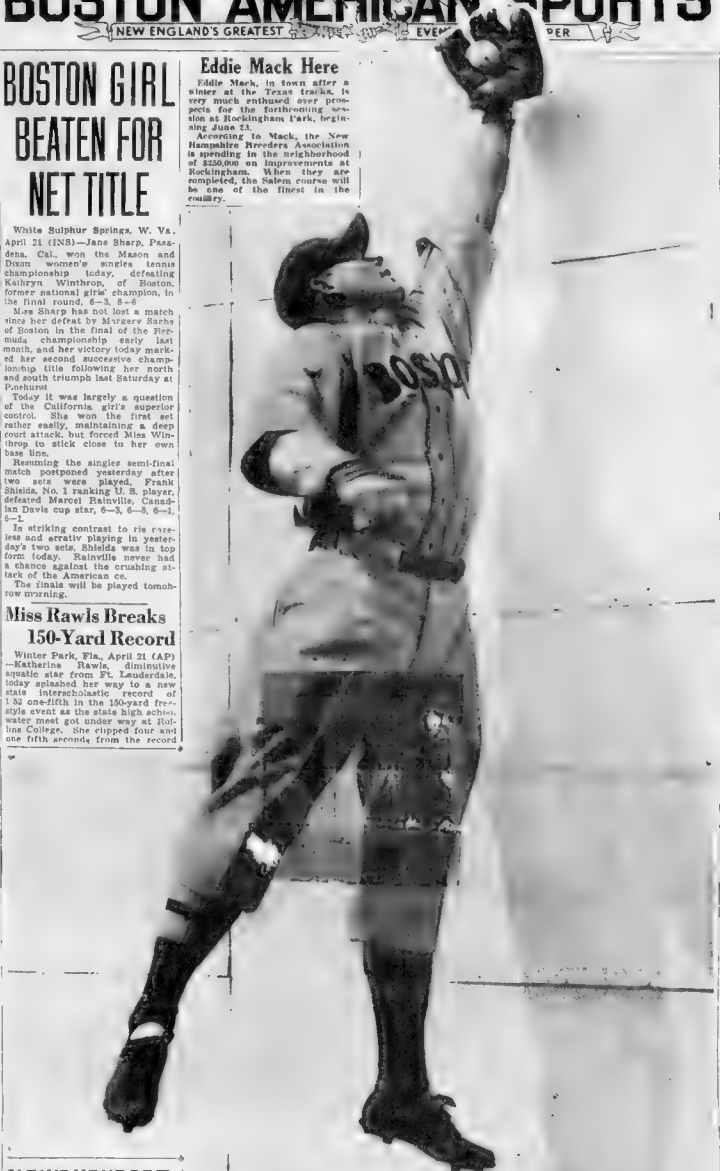
Miss Rawls Breaks 150-Yard Record

Winter Park, Fla., April 21 (AP)—Katherine Rawls, diminutive aquatic star from Ft. She clipped four and one fifth seconds from the record

Eddie Mack Here

Eddie Mack, in town after a winter at the Texas tracks, is very much enthused over prospects for the forthcoming session at Rockingham Park, beginning June 23.

According to Mack, the New Hampshire Breeders Association is spending in the neighborhood of $250,000 on improvements at Rockingham. When they are completed, the Salem course will be one of the finest in the country.



Hose foe out! is a sure bet slogan every time Roy Johnson races after a fly in his sector of the Red Sox outfield. High, or low, he gets 'em all. Here he spears a drive far up the outfield wall. His fielding has thrilled Sox followers this season. (Picture by Boston Evening American staff photographer.)

NEWBURYPORT, SALEM IN 0-0 GRID TIE

The final score was Salem 0, Newburyport 0.

Salem made a threat in the first period when Gibbons intercepted a New buryport pass and brought it to Naburyport's 30-yard line with a 20-yard run.

Newburyport's best effort was nullified by a penalty for unnecessary roughness in the second period. Reed raced 25 yards through the Salem team to the Witches' 15, but "Doo" Mooney brought the ball back just before the half ended.

OUIMET LEADS TEAM ABROAD

By Associated Press

New York, April 21—Jack Burke Quimet, who has played on every Walker Cup squad since 1922, today put the finishing touches on plans for his Canadian golf invasion, and the international golf matches with the British at St. Andrews May 11 and 12.

"I think it is as good a team as any I have been on," Quimet said just before sailing, and he said that included, those of which Bobby Jones was a member.

"Of course we miss Bob," he added.

President Herbert Jaques John G. Jackson and George Depew were among United States Golf Association executives down to bid them farewell.

GUILFORD IS TO PLAY ABROAD

Jesse P. Guilford, former U. S. amateur champion at various times Massachusetts state champion and ... holder of the Massachusetts ... title today announced he would enter the British amateur championships at Prestwick, Scotland, next month.

Guilford has not been abroad since 1926 when he was a member of the Walker Cup team which played at St. Andrews. He competed in the British amateur after the Walker Cup play but was beaten at Muirfield by a ... opponent, Simpson.

Guilford lives at Newtonville and represents the Woodland Golf Club.

Mr. Boston Says:—

Carnera and Bob Cats Sleeping in Woods Primo Working Hard

By Jack Conway

CHARLEY MILLER [illegible] me from his camp at M[illegible] head Lake, Me., that Prim[illegible] Carnera is training hard each day and rapidly getting into condition for the defense of his world heavyweight championship against Max Baer at the Garden Bowl at Long Island, N. Y., on June 14.

The little [illegible] one of M[illegible] the veteran trainer conditioning process.

"Dear Mr. Boston:

"The ringing of the axe and crash of falling timber is breaking the stillness of the great Maine woods these days as Primo Carnera, world heavyweight champion, gets in his preliminary training at my camp on Moosehead Lake for his title battle with Max Baer in New York on June 14.

"Carnera and his party are now quartered in my camp on the snow crusted shores of majestic Moosehead Lake. They came planning on spending a month in the wilderness but after one week, Primo was so impressed with the country that he has decided to extend his stay another week. The champ is also planning on getting in some real gym training and has sent to Bangor for medicine balls, ropes and light and heavy bags.

"The daily routine mapped out by me, sends Carnera scrambling up over the rugged slopes of big Squaw Mountain to greet the rising sun and then back down into the timber, through the dense spruce forests and across the lake to the camp, where he takes a session with the double bitted axe before breakfast

Has Personal Chef

"Primo has his personal chef along with him and devours large portions of the best in groceries. He eats heartily and seems in good humor at all times. He laughs and jokes with his camp mates after the evening meal, plays a game or two of cards and is in his bed of balsam boughs by 9 p. m.

"The giant loves the scenery and says he knows of no better place in the world for a fighter to train than in the big Moosehead country. He likes his work, even though only preliminary to the grind that is to come, very seriously. A very conscientious fellow, he never shirks the work lined out for him. He has a small mountain of wood cut and piled up beside his cabin.

Noises of the Woods

"THE BLOOD curdling screams of the bob cats, the hoot of the owls and the baying of the fours never break the heavy silence of the champion. He goes to bed dog tired each night and awakens with the first silver rays of dawn in the east, refreshed and ready for another day of work.

"He is in fine shape and says he will be in the best condition of his career when he steps into the New York battle pulpit to face the cocky California playboy, Max Baer.

"I have talked much with Primo about Baer. He tells me he saw Baer knock out Max Schmeling. He says Baer won more because Schmeling was so had that night rather than because the Californian is a great fighter.

"Primo thinks Baer is a bit dumb. He also calls attention to the way Max lies. Primo says a heavyweight must be careful of his living, and must train hard if he is to succeed.

"The champion is very happy that he is able to train properly for the Baer bout. In the past he tells me he has spent most of his time giving exhibitions and barnstorming. This is the first opportunity the big fellow has had to train properly. He should be in magnificent condition when he enters the ring against Baer.

"Say hello for me to Sharkey, Zeramby and to my other friends in Boston."

"The champion is very happy that he is able to train properly for the Baer bout. In the past he tells me he has spent most of his time giving exhibitions and barnstorming. This is the first opportunity the big fellow has had to train properly. He should be in magnificent condition when he enters the ring against Baer.

HIGH TORQUE BEST BET IN 4TH AT HAVRE DE GRACE MONDAY

HIGH CLOUD'S DAUGHTER IN EASY RACE

[illegible] Going to give EVANGELIST another chance to reach the winner's circle. He has been close up in most of his starts. BACK BENDER brings enough to end much better than recent races suggest. HANNAH ANNE is the class of the second group of consolation.

SECOND RACE
Chips, Kanal, Murmuring

[illegible] CHIPS displayed a world of speed before being taken up for the first race. That race might have been the first step. Prep ing to that effort he barely beaten a nose by Luck in in a muddy run race. KANAL has had several recent workouts and stands for a good race. MURMURING may prove to be the dark horse.

THIRD RACE
Energetic Boy, Dancing Mack, Red Run.

[illegible] The track looks a good spot for ENERGETIC BOY. He was a winner over similar company during the recent Hialeah season. DANCING MACK seems to be winning effort every now and then. He's about due. RED RUN has been taking a see-saw [illegible] with according to the work-ups.

FOURTH RACE
High Tor que, Can't Remember, Patch Pocket.

[illegible] If anything runs HIGH TORQUE here it will have to be CAN'T REMEMBER. The latter has speed to burn. PATCH POCKET found remarkable improvement during the winter season. He'll be dangerous if he still retains that form.

FIFTH RACE
Ladino, Butter Beans, Brown Wisdom

[illegible] LADINO has been dropped down into the cheaper company. Looks like the son of Lullaby should fatten earn brackets here. BUTTER BEANS is very consistent, but doesn't appear capable of coping with the top one. BROWN WISDOM was a topnotch hurdler for former owners in this track.

SIXTH RACE
Spanish, Polite, Wee Tide

[illegible] SPANISH is well suited by all conditions here. The opponents is the kind he can master. POLITE was a fair sort last year. The reckless report from Miami. WEE TIDE has been off form. He may improve.

SEVENTH RACE
Peedeegee Pyrmickets, Gallic

[illegible] PEEDEEGEE looks [illegible] the right one of his last. He was beaten only two points in that effort. PERMICKETY was a fair sort for his recent form. Park meeting. GALLIC's speed and may prove dangerous.

New Hurdle Mark In School Meet

New York April 21 (AP)—Stephen F. Wayne Jr., of 12 Orange High school, new Jersey, created a new meet record in the 220-yard high hurdles at the 26th annual New York Interscholastic track and field meet got under way here today. Wayne covered the event in 26.2 seconds, two-tenths of a second under the mark made in 1932 by H. Johnson of Lawrenceville.

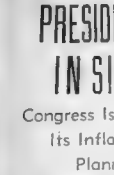
'RIGHT' TURN OF PRESIDENT IS IN SIGHT

Congress Is Halted in Its Inflationary Planning

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

That turn to the "right" President Roosevelt was supposed to be making a week back begins to look like the real thing. While conservatives watched with tongue in cheek and crossed fingers Congress went right along with its inflationary plans. The word went around that the powerful forces of the inflationists, under the able leadership of Senator Elmer Thomas, would prove a too great a stumbling block for President Roosevelt, and his plans to ease up on "New Deal" policies. The news dispatches inform us that the President has definitely decided to lock and bar the door against currency inflation. The silver proponents met with fast failure when they attempted to secure his agreement to mandatory legislation to raise white metal prices. So it seems the subject near and dear to the hearts of mid-western legislators is stricken from the rolls.



Senator Thomas

The progress of share prices toward new highs for the bull market is under the shadow of the Securities Exchange Regulation bill. The Senate has rendered its version of what control should be and it has a number of harsh points. None-the-less it is far superior to the original. The House is now laboring to produce a measure ameliorating curbs and corrections of the evils it sees existing in current trading methods. Too many "teeth" would probably make for a sharp dip. But many tape watchers are confident it would soon be followed by an equally sharp rally.

The fright the Canadian proposed to tax gold miners 30 per cent caused among holders of gold shares seems to be good occasions in our opinion. Without going into the merits of such a proposal, or the wisdom of those sold on it, there is one thing we want to remember. Sudden bad news on an industry may cause a bad break, but invariably prices recover close to the levels at which they were selling before they were caught unaware by the unexpected.

Notes Some of the gossips are saying that the trouble with McLellan Stores is that a "backwards" dividend is feared by some . . . In other words an assessment . . . We hear that Purity Baking is well situated . . . And those who think prices of shares are too high might note that the market figured on old profits but has not advanced materially in the past year . . . But business line . . . So why should one be afraid to take the view prices ought to catch up without delay.

Issues that act better than average on our personally kept records are Atchison, Air Reduction, General Electric, American Power & Light, International Harvester, John Manville, Owens-Illinois, Texas Corp., Canada Dry and Western Union. Most of these were noted before here at close to the low levels we said appeared to accumulation areas We should not be afraid to add them to present holdings on slight dips.

The National Industrial Conference Board reports that production of durable and non-durable goods during March and the first half of April had better than seasonal increases. Building, engineering construction, automobile and steel output, electric power production and textile manufacturing are mentioned as items that made notable gains. Then lumber production is still bringing ahead. The week ended April 14 showed the heaviest figures since last August.

Dividend Changes Again Favorable

New York, April 21 (AP)—Standard Statistics Co. reports 17 favorable dividend changes this week compared with 22 a week ago. The list comprises five increases, four resumptions six extras and two initial payments. There were only two unfavorable changes against seven the previous week.

Growing Hope of Big Markets in Next Few Months

By WALL ST. SPECTATOR

Will Street gave a sigh of relief when a day passed without another rackup in the grain market. This had something to do with the way stocks stepped along late yesterday The big thing, though, is that there is a growing hope around of some big markets ahead in the next few months, and apparently a lot of people are getting aboard for fear of missing the bott.

RAIL STOCKS FAVORED

Some of the smart boys are looking into railroad preferred stocks. This is a natural development, considering the strength of the senior issues of industrial and other companies in the last few weeks . . . To this can be added the fact that the preferred stocks of a number of rails, like the Erie, Baltimore & Ohio and Southern, are currently selling very much higher than their common shares.

There is a report General Motors will pay 25 cents extra at its meeting next month . . . Du Pont is developing some substantial earnings of its own . . . We hear a crowd in Philadelphia is working in General Asphalt. The stock has had an erratic and very unsatisfactory market history in the last few years . . . Insiders are still optimistic on Pullman, due to the way the company's equipment business is shaping up.

One of the choice bits of gossip is that "Doc" Crawford is wrong on the market again.

He is said to have been caught short on the present rally . . . Unless he is riding Auburn down. He played the stock in a big way in the past. Poor action of the issue stocks is causing switching to other groups. Government price data is expected to bring a cut in whiskey prices before long.

Goodyear is behind the other rubber shares, considering respective selling prices last year . . . Considerable buying in Northern Pacific is attributed to a crowd close to its banking sponsors.

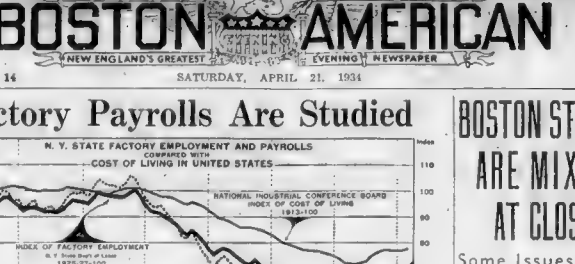
Factory Payrolls Are Studied



By JOSEPH STAGG LAWRENCE
Review of Reviews

This chart presents three lines which are the subject of controversial discussion — this, even though the facts are reasonably definite and in each case gathered by agencies regarding whose integrity there can be no question. The cost of living is computed by the National Industrial Conference Board, and is subject of course to check by other similar indices. Its use is favored by statisticians because it seems to be the broadest and most reliable of all those that are available.

Factory payrolls are reported by the New York state department of labor. The index, both of payrolls and employment, is computed by a staff which was trained by Miss Frances Perkins, the present secretary of labor.

The line to point at issue: William Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, in the report released, noted with satisfaction the increase in employment and the rise in wages. This satisfaction was immediately tempered with the observation that much of the increase in pay had been offset by a rise in the cost of living.

The point made was that most of the budding prosperity of industry was being side-tracked into the pockets of bond holders and stock owners. Hins charged that fully three-quarters of the increase in wages had been offset by a rise in the cost of living.

Taking the increase in the hourly rates of pay as reported by twenty-five major industries. It would seem that the rate of compensation for the worker during the past year has risen 22 per cent. As against this, the cost of living has moved up from 71.5 to 78.5, a rise of 10 per cent.

LEWIS HANEY SPECTATOR'S COMMENT
B. C. FORBES

Strict Control of Oil Refinery Output Assured

Chicago, April 21.—Strict control of refinery output will be practically assured by the proposed amendment expected to be incorporated shortly into the oil industry's code. The proposed control plan is understood to have the approval of refiners representing about 90 per cent. of the industry's refining capacity.

Under this amendment, which will replace the present refining clause of the code, the country would be divided into eight districts and refining allocators appointed for each of

NEW YORK CLOSE NET CHANGES

New York, April 21—Stocks were irregular at the close of today's dealings on the New York Exchange. Trading started fairly brisk but activity dwindled later. Fluctuations were generally confined to fractions. Aside a mild display of firmness by steel shares, the list was without feature.

Fractional recessions were registered by Aviation Corporation, American Can, U. S. Smelting and American Telephone. Columbian Carbon rose more than 2 points. Shares steady to a bit higher included U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Consolidated Gas, United Aircraft and General Motors.

There was a considerable profit taking in evidence which brought fractional losses in Chesapeake & Ohio, Corn Products and American Can.

Railroad shares were again strong with Atchison a leader.

Holding that it is firmly of the view that under existing provisions should be included in the mortgage, the I. C. C. authorized Chicago & Northwestern Railway to procure the authentication and delivery of $7,725,000 of first and refunding mortgage 5% bonds in connection with refinancing of its Oct. 1, 1933, maturities of an equal amount of Fremont, Elk Horn & Missouri Valley Railroad Co. consolidated mortgage bonds.

Since there is no present intention to sell any of the bonds, the commission did not impose the sinking fund requirement, but stated that it would do so before approving the sale of any additional bonds issued under the mortgage.

Generally higher prices ruled in the first hour with moderate changes appearing for leaders. Homestake Mining gave one of its spectacular performances, advancing 15 points. National Lead about recovered yesterday's sharp decline of over 5 points.

United Fruit, United Carbon, Worthington Pump, Packard, Case, Stern, Air Reduction, Crown Cork & Seal, Kansas City Southern, New York Airbrake, Pennick & Ford and Columbian Carbon showed advances of a point or better. Westinghouse Airbrake was around a point higher.

Auburn Motor dropped 2 points. Corn Products was down a point. Gains slipped back slightly more than a point. American Telephone, Baltimore & Ohio, Texas Gulf Sulphur were at moderately lower levels. U. S. Steel, Case Threshing and Beatrice Creamery were at fractionally higher levels.

Sales to 11 a. m. approximated 460,000 shares.

Building operations throughout the country were being watched closely by industrial observers for confirmation of the movement toward recovery.

During the week of April 18, the Engineering News Record reported total contract awards, amounting $32,248,000, the second highest amount for the year to date. It ranged as follows: Public works, that prospects for the near future were chiefly dependent upon the willingness of state and municipal bodies to go ahead with long-delayed public works projects.

With the recent sharp decline of the dollar in terms of European gold currencies, banking circles were wondering if the treasury will permit shipments of the metal to countries whose currencies rise to the point where shipments would be profitable. Since the revaluation of the dollar, this country has received a huge amount of foreign gold. Whether Washington would look with favor upon retaining some of this for monetary use is a matter of considerable discussion.

While the British pound reacted a cent to $5.16⅝ in overnight dealings, the French franc moved up .01¼ of a cent to 6.68 cents. Its parity is about 6.63 cents. The gold export point for the franc is around 6.69 cents.

Refractories Co. Profit $144,723

Philadelphia, April 21.—General Refractories Co. reports for quarter ended March 31, 1934, net profit of $144,723 after interest, depreciation, depletion and federal taxes, equal to 52 cents a share on the 279,268 shares, against net loss of $265,358 in first quarter of 1933.

Net profit for 12 months ended March 31, 1934, amounted to $439,885 after charges and federal taxes, equal to $1.58 a share.

Empire Power Dividend Lower

New York, April 21—Empire Power Corp. declared a dividend of 30 cents on the participating stock, payable May 10 to stock of record April 30. Previous payment was 56 cents on April 1, 1933.

Oil Allowable in Texas Increased

KATHARINE HEPBURN AND IRENE DUNNE TILT FOR LEAD IN 'EXONERATION'

Lights and Shadows

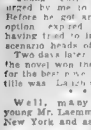
By George Holland

A few years back in Hollywood, I was impressed with the high literary quality and authenticity of a novel dealing with the Navajo Indians. I wired the author in New York was referred to his agents and received a short option on the picture rights of the novel. The sales price agreed on was $12,500.

Young Carl Laemmle was urged by me to read the book. Before he got around to my option expired. Many having tried to interest the scenario heads of Hollywood.

Two days later a friend of the novel won the Pulitzer Prize for the best piece of literature. The title was Laemmle.

Well, many months later young Mr. Laemmle called me in New York and asked me to and him in upon



David Belasco

Wrote Mr. who had received the author's permission to dramatize the book. Finally, young Mr. Laemmle bought the picture rights for $42,500, if my memory serves me the figures is correct.

Bringing it up to date, "Laughing Boy" is playing at Loew's Orpheum, with Ramon Novarro and Lupe Velez in the chief roles, and Harleigh Schultz tells me it is moving and fine.

I like that ancient crack of George S. Kaufman's, "Satire is what closes Saturday night," the saturnine Mr. Kaufman declared. Satire and every other kind of legitimate show offered to the theatre-going public will be "what closes Saturday night," unless the important theatrical producers of the federal administration for the industry take some steps this spring or summer to blot out this "throwaway racket," which is where the public is foshed into believing they are getting a theatrical bargain for 40 cents.

"Rothschild" Is at Film Peak

Announcement is made by United Artists that "The Private Life of Rothschild" now showing at the Majestic is not to be generally re-issued until some time this fall.

Miriam Hopkins Choice in Play 'Intimate' Which Portrays Composites of Stars

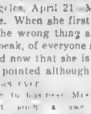
By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

(Copyright, 1934, by Universal Service, Inc.)

Los Angeles, April 21—Mrs. Pat Campbell a bark is more than her bite. When she first came to Hollywood she had more fun saying the wrong thing at the wrong time and getting the goat, so to speak, of everyone in town. She was calmed down considerably and now that she is here to stay her barbs will probably be less pointed although we hope she will continue to be as amusing as ever.

To get down to business Mrs. Campbell did such a swell job in Robert Ames Thalberg has agreed her as Lady Ex[illegible] Her opposite [illegible] Herbert M[illegible] shall. That means [illegible] England's [illegible] Hollywood.



Louella O. Parsons

Incidentally Hepburn and Irene Dunne are both putting up a battle to get the lead in "Accent on Youth." How Ann Sothern must hate Mrs. Campbell. Ann's been playing the part on the stage for two years and now it looks as though Mrs. Campbell will get the role in the picture. Ann's been a good sport about it all, but I'll bet she's sore underneath.

You will have fun trying to find which part of "Intimate" is Anna Held and which part is

Jeanne Eagels. Miriam Hopkins is [illegible] Mrs. Campbell. Melville Baker and Jack Kirkland have written a sketch in which they admit is a composite character of several of the famous stage stars. Mr. Hopkins is the present [illegible] for the role of Mrs. Campbell, as it was first expected Ruth Chatterton would be chosen to adapt herself to the role. Miss Chatterton, however, is not in this picture, but is [illegible] York.

Chatter in Hollywood

A quiet little war is on between Warner Brothers and Radio. Radio is peeved and pouting at the moment at Busby Berkeley for staging a number called "Hawaiian Heleva" for "Dames." Radio claims Lou Brock six months ago announced he would do a "South Sea Bubbles" for "Dames" to "The Last Yacht." What about it, Lou? Didn't you do a "South Sea Bubbles" for "The Last Yacht"? Anyway, the fight is on, with Radio spitting fire because they claim Busby Berkeley tried to get some of their girls. What about it, Busby? Have you got any?

The word will be waiting to hear Enrico Caruso is dead on the case and only [illegible] A the word will get a chance to hear his voice at the Forum [illegible] a Spanish version adapted from Victor Herbert's operetta Mme. Pompadour, popular in Hollywood [illegible] Warner Baxter and the week will receive his contract. [illegible] Incidentally, a few [illegible] finished. The version is in Spanish but Mr. Reachi plans to make an English version and also plans to make other pictures with young Caruso.

Arthur Brisbane and Floyd Gibbons Broadcasting Together Tonight

By N. F. T.

Always good to have word that Arthur Brisbane, celebrated newspaper editor of the Hearst organization will be broadcasting. Such advice is in hand today. Mr. Brisbane will be accompanied to the microphone by William A. Curley, managing editor of the New York Journal and Floyd Gibbons, ace war correspondent and outstanding writer of the journalistic fraternity. Station WEEI brings the Brisbane-Curley-Gibbons trio to those parts this evening at exactly 6:30 p. m. It is a coast to coast network feature, originating in New York.

Interesting is the topic chosen by these men for discussion. Mr. Brisbane has selected the most important news stories covered and served to the public by International News Service during the last 25 years. Floyd Gibbons will tell the stories named in his characteristic style, which is vigorously distinctive, and Mr. Curley closes the program, speaking briefly on behalf of the vast INS interests.

ALL-STAR ATTRACTION

Admiral Byrd and his boys off there in Antarctica have something extraordinary being sent to them tonight on the stroke of 10. An impressive array of celebrated artists are to hold forth if ever a company of notables assembled. Network facilities of CBS carry the 60 minutes (WNAC) as planned for presentation in the Hotel Astor ballroom, New York City. Ginger Rogers, John Charles Thomas, Irene Dunne, Lanny Ross, Fred Astaire and others will take part. Meyer Davis and his orchestra attend to the musical end of it all.

Joe Cook, comedian and all around merrymaker, moves into the "House Party" master of ceremonies spotlight tonight (WEEI) come 9 o'clock, lending some laughable color to the soloing of Donald Novis and Frances Langford. Don Voorhees and his popular tune troupe occupy the melody minutes as usual.

LOCAL LATHER

They have a worth while start on that prison program plan up at WRZ studios. Meaning the "mike" show mentioned here in the "colyum" some days ago. Al Whelton, gas newspaper man, is taking a hand, with Jim Hadfield, Gordon Hayworth and Frank Ferraro rounding out the cast. Listen for it soon and hear a worth while bit of dial diversion . . . Also gratifying is a note saying Jimmy McLaughlin, Alice Blue and Joe Dunn are slated to hold down the "After Dinner Revue" spot (WEEI) tonight at 7:30 p. m. An excellent harmony combination these three as . . . Veterans and families will hear from James E. Van Zandt, Commander-in-chief, Veterans of Foreign Wars when he speaks (WHDH) on the local waves this evening at 6:45 . . . Linus Macdonald is a little 9-carat-ed chap who took a cornet in tip top fashion. Linus is one of the more than 73,000 "Secret Agent X-9" followers recruited by our favorite evening newspaper and tomorrow morning he is guest on the air with "Uncle Bob" Houghton, who commands the kiddie audience without a challenge (WNAC) from 10:15 until 10:45 in the morning.

Mackerel Fleet at Sea on Prices

Gloucester, April 21—The mackerel fleet was at sea today, and NRA officials had yet to approve the price fixing section of the code, so everybody was wondering what the outcome would be. The fear is that the catch limit enforced by the local fishermen will be less than the code calls for.

Rare Cheers Greet "Tarzan" at Loew's State, as Best Picture of Its Kind

By KIPLING'S MOWGLI

As Told to Harleigh Schultz

"Tarzan and His Mate" is my own idea of the jungle man's dream come true. Being (young as I am) the father of all the Tarzan family, I have often wondered why Hollywood never tackled my own epic tale, known to children the world over before Tarzan ever saw the light of day. So I can bring expert testimony to bear—that Loew's State film is the answer to my jungle heart's prayer.

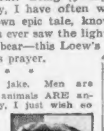
Everything's jake. Men are men, and the animals ARE animals—and, say, I just wish so gorgeous a girl as Maureen O'Sullivan had come into my young life, back there with the Bandar-log (monkey people), with Baloo the bear, Bagheera the panther, Kaa the great snake, and Sheerkhan the tiger. All the children know Cedric Gibbons—I'm one of 'em—Elephants, my pal, and let me tell them that Toomai had nothing on the agile Johnny Weissmuller.



With my friend the film reviewer (he has known me since his romper days) I was on hand early. There must have been 500 standing in the rain, outside the theater. Slick young folks. They piled in, and swarms that came after them packed that house solid for the first show yesterday. I never saw a better audience, and it thrilled me just to hear their applause—as, say, for Cheetah, the hero ape.

Well, the picture began. Old Leo, the More-Golden-Movies lion, roared out his cheerio greeting that always goes with M-G-M films. He was in even happier mood than usual. Then they finished the "credits," and when I caught the name of Cedric Gibbons (hubby of Dolores del Rio) as director, I knew I was in for a feast of camera action. "Ced" never fails—and this one, I'm telling you, is the Tarzan classic.

"Ced" takes up where the other Tarzan left off. Not by all the fang-and-claw in the jungle code (we beat, thanks to Father Kipling, the NRA to it by two generations, on this code business) the new picture is brisker, more thrilling, better paced, more authentic than any of the others.

Listen:

It packs all the punches of the circus, of the zoo, of Hollywood film love, plus all the "socks" of the animal and all the adventure movies.

It's action in the terms of brass tacks. It has more fighting than any "Western" ever made. It has battles, no end—men and men, man and lioness, man and crocodile (under water thriller) and man with no less than a charging rhinoceros. Honest, it's so realistic it gives me the kick of all my own memories of personal experiences in the jungle.

I joined in the cheering. I laughed and laughed at the antics of the Bandar-folk—to my mind the stars of the picture. Next, of course, to Cedric Gibbons

Give "Ced" a big hand—his film is a knockout for man, woman, and child.

FOR me, Mowgli, it IS the life itself!

"Narcotic" in Third Week

"Narcotic," expose of the fate which overtakes drug addicts, will continue for a third week at the Tremont Theater. Originally scheduled to close this week, response has been such that it was decided to hold the film over for another week, at which time it must give way to the booking of Evelyn Laye in "Waltz Time in Vienna," now definitely booked for the Tremont beginning April 28.

Wonderment

Fay Wray, romantic lass in "The Bowery," featured on screen at the Scollay Square Theater.

Premiere

RKO Keith's announces the premier of "Catherine the Great," at a special showing next Friday night at 5:30 o'clock, with seats at regular prices. Plans have been made to usher it in this film distinctively with lights, sound tricks, and special radio broadcast of the opening, directly from the lobby of Keith's. State and city officials as well as many important celebrities, have been invited to attend.

"Catherine the Great," is Alexander Korda's successor to the "Private Life of Henry VIII" and was directed by Dr. Paul Czinner. It marks the American debut of Elizabeth Bergner, the most talked-of dramatic actress of the European stage and screen, now starring in "Escape Me Never," the London success which arrives on Broadway next fall. Opposite Miss Bergner in the role of Peter III, is Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

OUT WHERE REVIEWS ARE FA'R 'N' SQUAR'

(Movie Review From Bisbee, Arizona, Brewery Gazette.)

"'Dancing Lady' is supposed to be a very extra specia' picture, probably because of the surprise finish. Laughter turns to amazement when Joan Crawford dances. It is marvelous, astonishing, gigantic, colossal. She shows great talent and more than talent in the bathing episode. Gable pats her on the back but his aim is low. In fact, he hits below the belt. The finish shows Joan Crawford in the arms of Gable. This is the surprise finish—the hero and the heroine united. Or maybe we're wrong; it may have been done that way before."

False is the notion that ordinary umbrellas protect—shelter with 100 per cent efficiency. Reason: Handle centrally located, forces carrier to expose shoulder to rain drip. Result: Pneumonia.* Umbrella of future, says Professor Umberdust of Yale, will be constructed so, when raised, handle will be at one side of center, leaving central high pressure area unobstructed.

NEW ENGLAND'S GREATEST EVENING NEWSPAPER

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1934

LARGEST EVENING CIRCULATION BY MORE THAN 80,000

'Reds' and 'Pinks'

With clear allusion to the recent exposure by the Hearst papers of the Communist propaganda in American schools, former Justice George N. Clark, of the Supreme Court of Michigan, speaking at Detroit on Saturday night, exclaimed:

"Thank goodness, some American newspapers have the courage to inform the public how the Communistic influence is seeping into our schools."

The series of articles which was concluded recently in the Hearst papers not only revealed the systematic effort now in progress to poison the minds of youthful Americans with false and distorted views of their government, but they gave the names of those promoting this propaganda, showed the methods employed, presented facsimiles of the circulars being disseminated through our schools, and with particularity and detail exhibited the scandal in its entirety.

Justice Clark was speaking to an audience of 1400 people at a banquet of the Wayne County Republican Committee.

"I appeal to you," he said, "as good Americans, to stand by America and true American principles. Don't follow the "Pinks"—those who have a voice in the Government, like the so-called brain trusters—who show Red tendencies."

This is an interesting repercussion of the fake investigation staged by the Bulwinkle Committee of the House into the manifestly sincere and well-intended warnings of Dr. William A. Wirt.

The Democratic politicians can concoct their little program to disconcert and discredit a good American for doing what he conceives to be his duty to the country. They may check his utterances, break up his testimony with calculated interruption, and indulge generally in the clumsy brow-beating to which Congressional committees are so prone, BUT THEY DO NOT FOOL THE PEOPLE.

A judgment is forming in the clear and honest thoughts of Americans which is anything but favorable to the "Frankfurter lawyers," the Richbergs, the Jerome Franks, and the Tugwells of the Administration. They have had their run-around, spoken their little pieces, put out their schoolboy themes and these, with a lot of twaddle about "INTEGRATION" and "SYNTHESES" and "CORRELATIVES" and all those little strutting, but empty, verbalisms which stunt a classroom but leave a sensible man either amused or wholly unimpressed.

They have had their day. Their sun is setting. They have done their stuff. The American people have sized them up.

Such is the judgment—not yet very vocal, but destined to become more so—which is spreading through the land.

There are MILLIONS OF PLAIN ORDINARY AMERICANS WHO THINK as Judge Clark thinks. Pretty soon there will be many more WHO SPEAK AS HE SPEAKS.

YOU CANNOT FOOL ALL THE PEOPLE ALL OF THE TIME. THIS IS STILL A MAXIM OF AMERICAN LIFE.

Advancing Figures

In thirty-seven States, the Public Works Administration announces, increased building construction provided work for thousands of men last month.

The relative figures showed that both publicly and privately financed building contracts awarded in the territory east of the Rockies vaulted from $96,716,000 in February of this year to $179,163,000 in March—an increase of $82,447,000.

The same authority announces that with Public Works funds a national survey is being rapidly completed showing the condition of millions of homes on which repairs and improvements may be properly financed by Federal home loan agencies.

And, besides, previous studies revealed that at least 750,000 new homes are needed throughout the country.

Months ago the Hearst newspapers, in co-operation with two Hearst magazines, American Architect and Good Housekeeping, advocated such a national movement.

Slow to start, the movement is in progress—and the statistics for March are proof of what it means in terms of re-employment and of recovery.

Congressional 'Attorneys' Attacked by Garner

By James T. Williams, Jr.

As vice-president of the United States, Mr. Garner is charged by the federal constitution with the duty of presiding over the sessions of the Senate. As president of the Senate he has no vote excepting a casting vote when there is a tie vote on a pending proposal.

Even then it is the vice-president's privilege either to break the tie by voting in the affirmative or to withhold his vote, in which case the motion is lost.

But Vice-President Garner showed no hesitancy about exercising his rare privilege of voting when a motion of Senator Borah of Idaho to take up his bill to prohibit senators and representatives in Congress from acting as attorneys where the United States has an interest in the case. The vote on this motion was as the

GARNER ENDS TIE

Mr. Garner's vote broke the tie and brought up the bill. But as this occurred in "the morning hour" the bill was laid aside when 2 o'clock came and the regular business before the Senate replaced the Borah bill.

Sooner or later the Borah bill will become a law and the courage shown by Vice-President Garner in bringing it before the Senate will be rewarded. The Borah bill was recently reported favorably to the Senate from the committee on the judiciary of which Senator Norris of Nebraska is chairman. It provides:

That no senator or representative or delegate in Congress shall receive any compensation whatever, directly or indirectly, for any services rendered to any person, corporation or association, either by himself or another in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest or other matter or thing in which the United States as a party is directly or indirectly interested before any court whatever.

During the administration of the first President Roosevelt a United States senator from a Middle Western state was sent to jail for practicing before one of the executive departments while a senator in Congress. The theory of the statute under which he was punished is the theory upon which Vice-President Garner and the committee on the judiciary favor the extension of the rule to all governmental agencies, as provided for in the Borah bill.

The theory is that "no man can serve two masters." Consequently no senator can serve both the public interest, which as a national legislator he takes oath to serve, if at the same time he is accepting fees to serve some special or private interest as an attorney.

To the brief debate that followed the vote of the Vice-President which put the Borah bill before the Senate, a notable contribution was made by Senator Logan of Kentucky. He served his state as chief justice before coming to the Senate. His argument in support of the bill was straightforward, logical and sincere. It was on this wise:

"No one need tell me that, when a senator represents some great railroad company, and a question affecting that railroad company comes before the United States Senate, the railroad company through its representatives, does not approach the senator more as a client to a lawyer than as to a United States senator for representing the whole people.

"I suspect I am, so far as money and property are concerned, the poorest man in the Senate. I am rich in a good many other respects which I think are worth while, and I do not care much about these other matters. But I would find some way of making a living without accepting fees from those who have business with the Congress of the United States or would I go home and resign and represent them as a private citizen."

ONE CHOICE FOR ALL

There would be a number of compulsory retirements from both Houses at the coming elections if the list of clients which certain senators and representatives in Congress serve as attorneys should be broadcast to the public in the meantime.

President Roosevelt is making headway in ridding the nations committee of his party of lawyers who practice before the various agencies of the government. Public sentiment supports the President's leadership in this direction.

And the leadership of Vice-President Garner, Senator Borah and Senator Logan to apply the same purge to both Houses of Congress will command public support North, East, South and West, when the issue comes crystal clear to the people of the several states and congressional districts of the Union.

"No man can serve two masters." No member of either House of Congress can serve with equal fidelity both the public interest and special interests at one and the same time.

An Act of Betrayal

President Roosevelt's appeal to Congress to keep faith with the Philippine people has fallen upon deaf ears at both ends of the Capitol.

As the tax bill goes to conference, it provides for a prohibitive tariff on copra and coconut coming to the mainland from the Philippines.

Secretary Dern's warning that such a levy, whether it be five cents a pound as voted by the House or three cents a pound as voted by the Senate, would doom to destitution millions of Filipinos, has been callously ignored by Senators and Representatives of both political parties.

Now comes a message from Governor General Frank Murphy, at Manila, denouncing this indefensible levy as "inequitable and unworthy," and expressing the hope that it will be vetoed by the President.

Only by vetoing the tax bill, into which this vicious betrayal of a dependent people has been lobbied, can America's solemn trust across the Pacific be safeguarded and American honor in the eyes of the world redeemed.

No President in the memory of men now living ever faced a more inspiring opportunity or a more imperative obligation to save the American people from the disgrace, and a dependent people from the suffering, that this wicked levy, which Congress has voted, would inevitably involve.

For twenty-five years, the free exchange of products between the continental United States and the Philippine Islands has built up a trade that is advantageous to both peoples. If this arrangement had been established by a reciprocity treaty, the prohibitive tariff on copra and coconut oil, which Congress has voted, would constitute a clear violation of such a treaty.

But the Philippine people are a dependent people—dependent upon the sense of justice of the American Congress. The Congress has the power to deal with them fairly or unfairly. Their only protection is in the good faith of the Government at Washington.

This faith has been betrayed by Congress, and only by a veto of the tax bill which carries this injustice to the Philippine people can the President save the American people from the disgrace of such a betrayal.

Something New

The Bible tells us that there is nothing new under the sun.

Science, however, creates new things by letting us know of some which exist beyond the boundaries of our senses.

Every day science devises new instruments for its endless exploration into hitherto mysterious aspects of reality.

A spring made of delicate quartz glass now enables us to weigh a piece of human hair, five one-hundredths of an inch long, and to discover that it tips the balance at six one-millionths of a gram.

A camera with two lenses revolving in a circle at opposite ends of a diameter at 1500 revolutions a minute measures the speed of light and finds it travels, at times, as fast as 68,400 miles a second.

To the average person such figures sound like meaningless telephone numbers.

But they may pave the way to new and better telephones, cameras and other instruments of the future.

We're Richer

Wholehearted booming prosperity is far from here, but national income figures indicate that we've at last shifted in the direction of that famous corner around which we'll find it.

The national income of the country was $38,800,000,000 last year. That's $1,500,000,000 more than the previous year. It means that every person earned on the average $9 more than the previous year. But we're still a long way from the 1929 national income figure of $83,000,000,000.

Marry-Go-Round

By Helen Rowland

Love is not a "straight" emotion; it's a blend of the heart, the mind and the senses. A man may lose his heart, every spring—but until he loses the other two, he is safe from committing matrimony.

Helen Rowland

When a husband and wife live in perfect harmony and the home has the restful atmosphere of an ancient corndale, you may be sure that neither one of them is trying to "remodel" the other.

One faint breath of jealousy from a woman's lips will put out the lovelight in a man's heart more suddenly and effectively than a fire extinguisher. It merely confirms his secret suspicion that such a combination Adonis-Casanova-and-Solomon shouldn't be wasting ALL his charms on one girl.

This is the time of year, when a popular bachelor doesn't know whether he pities or envies the pal who married last June, and has only ONE woman to dodge, flatter and explain things to.

At this season, a girl should remind herself that when a man stops over with romance, it may mean only that its SPRING; but when he stops discussing the color of her eyes and begins talking bungalows, salaries and garden gadgets, the chances are that it may be LOVE.

A dominating personality may be all right in a man—but in a woman, it is usually about 5 per cent personality, 5 per cent brains—and 90 per cent determination to grab all the limelight and run other people's lives.

A girl feels that she may be able to struggle along, somehow, through the coming summer season without the proper clothes, if only she can afford a few of the snappy IMproper ones for the beach and the ballroom.

Sometimes, a woman prefers an admirer to a lover; but the hardest thing on earth to make a man believe, is that you want his FRIENDSHIP, but not his kisses.

Many a man is going to be married in June, who doesn't know it, yet—because the girl hasn't told him.

Listen World!

By Elsie Robinson

What's the matter with most business women? Why do so few achieve real records while the rest stay in the mob?

IS IT BECAUSE "THEY'RE JUST WOMEN" ARE WOMEN NATURALLY INFERIOR IN INTELLIGENCE AND INITIATIVE?

To the contrary, surveys show that girls are usually far brighter than boys, that women are frequently shrewder than men.

Not stupid. THEN ARE THEY LAZY?

No: again the girls get honors. The average woman will work circles around a man—will stick at her job where a man will soldier on his. And YET, year after year, she stays on that one spot, doing the same chores, without an added nickel.

Not stupid; not lazy. THEN IS IT, PERHAPS, BECAUSE "WOMEN WERE MADE FOR MARRIAGE?"

Elsie Robinson

Even so, wives have jobs nowadays, as well as homes. A girl goes to work after leaving school as naturally, as inevitably, as a boy. Nor does her job interfere with a possible romance. Instead, it is a great aid to romance. For a girl meets far more men while working than she could at home; has more freedom and fun, more pretty clothes.

And, having married, the working wife can make life much more pleasant and profitable for herself and her husband than the purely domestic one. Indeed, most wives frankly prefer business work to house work. Its obviously, love isn't gumming up the feminine industrial machinery.

WHAT IS?

Plainly, something. For 999 women out of 1000 are practically where they started, for five, 10 or 15 years after they take their first jobs. They know their way around better. They dress more charmingly, have a smarter "line" and may have had small raises and promotions. But most of them are still puttering at the same old chore.

AND — WHAT'S WORSE—THEY'RE STILL CONTENT TO PUTTER!

Of course, they'd like more money. Lots more money! Money to spend on themselves, on their homes. They'd also like more authority. They'd "get a kick out of putting it over on the other girls."

BUT FOR THE JOB ITSELF—FOR THE CHALLENGE AND ADVENTURE, THE PRIDE AND POWER INVOLVED IN BIGGER JOBS—THE AVERAGE WOMAN DOESN'T GIVE A HOOT. Never even thinks of it in those terms. Is never touched by that curiosity and excitement which men—even the laziest, silliest and most stupid men—feel about jobs.

Why should she feel these things? If she works hard, carefully, faithfully, doing what she is told—doing it eagerly, giving generously of time—shouldn't that be enough? Shouldn't that, naturally, result in raises and promotions? She thinks it should—AND SHE'S MAD WHEN IT DOESN'T.

She's mad, and sorry for herself. She thinks the world is "unfair to women; that men get all the breaks." She views with suspicion the women who are promoted over her. There's "something funny—something M-I-G-H-T-Y funny, Mabel!"

But is there? Is the male world really ganging the woman worker? Or is there something in the average woman worker, herself, which prevents her progress? What's the answer?

Ray W. Sherman touches the answer in his grand little book, "IF YOU WANT TO GET AHEAD," Little, Brown & Co., publishers.

Get that book! Whether you're a man or a woman worker, or just a dreaming youngster, get that book. Think about it—try it on YOURSELF.

Why do most working women remain business ciphers? Here's Mr. Sherman's answer:

"A man may dictate 30 letters and one telegram. A 'stenographer' will write and send them in the order dictated. A 'secretary' will write, submit and send the telegram before she touches a single letter. 'Secretaries' are worth two, three, four and five times as much money as 'stenographers.'

"The 'secretary' uses her head. She thinks. She gets a picture of things as the boss sees them, and makes herself a useful part of the machinery, the 'stenographer' gets no such picture. She never bothers to think about what kind of an employe is worth most to the boss, and she never changes herself."

Given the same start, the same job, the same mental equipment, 999 women out of 1000 do what they're told to do, work hard, faithfully, conscientiously—and stay put.

The 1000th girl thinks: uses her imagination; reaches beyond office routine into the adventure of the work; makes herself part of that adventure—and goes ahead!

So what? Just how does that apply to YOU?

THE OLD FOGIES

Ah, me, those times of long ago
When miles were long and speed was slow;
Those bowl-and-pitcher days of old
When winter nights were bitter cold,
And men and even women fair
Wore long and itchy underwear,
And street car drivers all appeared
With ice upon mustache and beard;
For, whether wrong or whether right,
Then whiskers were a man's delight!

I tell my children phone and car
Inventions very recent are.
They look at me in open doubt
And wonder how we lived without
The comforts round about them thrown,
Which they of course have always known.
I talk of walking and they smile,
For they have never walked a mile.
And I am sure they wonder how
We all contrived to live till now.

Sometimes at pictures old they grin;
Cry "beaver" at a bearded chin.
They laugh at skirts and petticoats
And whalebone at the women's throats.
But what they don't quite understand
Is everything at their command
Which they enjoy was made for them
By those old fogies they condemn.
Some funny fellow with a beard
The path of progress pioneered.

Stars and Stripes

Doc Wirt seems to have made the mistake of opening his mouth and forgetting to close it.

Hollywood girl wants $2,000,000 because a British lord promised to marry her and wed somebody else. She probably thinks that, with that much money, she can be a "lady" even if somebody else has got the title.

If it takes five years to put Insull in jail, as some lawyers predict, he'll be out before he gets in.

And, having to listen to Doc Wirt for five hours was enough to start a revolution.

Hoover has returned to California after having come East to visit his aunt, not his Uncle Sam.

Human Side of the News; Babson Is Optimistic

By Edwin C. Hill

Roger Ward Babson strokes his gray goatee and opines that things are looking up for a fact in these more or less United States. He's a pretty good predicter, is the astute Mr. Babson. On a number of occasions when most economists went haywire, Roger Babson saw or guessed what was coming. Thirty-five of his 57 years have been spent in gathering and analyzing statistics of business, and teaching 200 students in the Babson Institute at Wellesley.

It's in the record that in nineteen-twenty six he said that distinct business recession, and probably a panic, could be looked for within three years. In nineteen twenty-nine he followed that up with a sharp warning that the collapse was imminent. Wall Street hooted in derision. Financial editors penned paragraphs of ridicule. Criticism and abuse was poured upon his head. A few weeks later, the Babson panic arrived promptly on schedule, but Babson, offended at the rebuff his well-intended warnings has received, said that hereafter, when he had any talking to do, he would do it to his horse.

The reporters must have overheard his latest chat with Dobbin, for Babson is quoted as saying that the recipe for prosperity is "work harder and think harder." He knows seventy ways in which anybody can make a million dollars. Here are three of the ways: Invent a gearless automobile. Produce self-finding golf balls. Invent a fountain pen which will write in three different colors.

The curtain rises slowly in a New York theater. The stage is bare, except for a table, a sofa, a groundcloth and a curtain. A woman in her early 40's, taller than the average, with jet-black, lustrous hair and magnificent eyes—magnetic eyes—steps from the wings. While a packed house sits entranced, she enacts little dramas—alone, single-handed, with no assistant or assistance except the magic of her genius.

Before your eyes she transforms herself into a Southern belle, an Irish peasant, an Italian beggar or a Scotch immigrant, marvellously and to the life. Without any question, this enigmatic and mysterious lady is the greatest one-woman show in the world. In the general eclipse of the spoken drama, with the stage fallen on lean days, and scarcely more than four successful theatrical productions in New York, this remarkable player, who is her own author, stage director, manager and cast, fills her theater, with people storming vainly at the doors. She is Ruth Draper.

Her grandfather was Charles A. Dana of the New York Sun. Her father was William Draper, a physician. She played a small part which failed, went to France to entertain the A. E. F., thrilled and delighted the army camps and went to London to score her first great success. Shrewd and discerning critics like Ward Morehouse call her the greatest actress in the world—greater than Garbo or Katherine Cornell—greater than Ada Rehan and Mrs. Fiske and Sarah Bernhardt of the past.

Honors have been showered upon her gifted head. The Pope received her at the Vatican. She is the only actress who was ever presented at the Court of St. James. Every continental capital knows the thrill of her superlative artistry. Her complete equipment consists of the table, the chair, the sofa, the groundcloth and a curtain.

In a flash, she puts before your eyes a Ukrainian peasant, a Norwegian girl, an Arabian lady of the harem, a shrewd gumchewing telephone girl, and holds around every central character a rippling, flashing accompaniment of vivid life. Scorning publicity, she has never been interviewed. From the stage she retires behind a veil of impenetrable seclusion and mystery. How she achieves her amazing effects is a puzzle. Probably with those amazing eyes—those strange and glowing mesmeric eyes.

England's foreign policy is in the hands of a very astute gentleman named Sir John Simon. This tall, spare, immaculate, chilly, alert Foreign Secretary, has been trying to convince France that she has all the safety she needs, and to persuade Germany not to upset the European applecart. But his success has not been notable, and while war talk has abated over there, it is a fact that Europe is not only more heavily armed than at any time since the great war, but is steadily increasing her armament.

This cool, sciduious statesman has loomed in British affairs for the past fifteen years. He's an Oxford man, with all the protective veneer that Oxford gives her sons. During the wars he was a Liberal advocate of unpreparedness. He served, nevertheless, as a major in the air forces at the front.

Fifty-nine now, the Right Honorable Sir John Simon, model of precision and keep intellectuality, is recognized as the most scholarly and adroit member of the British government. They tell a story of Sir John which illustrates his keenness.

His most important case hinged on the identification, by the witness on the stand, of the client that he represented. Sir John asks the witness: "Have you a good memory for faces?" "Yes," said the witness. "Did you ever see me before?" demanded Sir John. "Never," said the witness. "Then take a look at this paper of pins which I purchased from you, yourself, in town shop yesterday." He won his case.
